Hope.

"There are hopes,—
Promising well, and love touch'd dreams for some,
And passions, many a wild one, and fair schemes
For gold and pleasure,
oh, if there were aught better hopes than these,—
Were there no palm beyond a feverish fame,—
If truth, and fervor, and devotedness,
Finding no worthy altar, must return
And die with their own fulness:—if beyond
The grave there is no heaven, in whose wide air
The spirit may find room, and in the love
Of whose bright habitants this lavish heart,
May spend itself,—what thrifted wasted fools are we!

Spes.

"Asleep or waking, visions of your face,
With all its quite grace,
And cold perfection, all the calm surprise,
And passionless great beauty of your eyes,
Forever mark my spirit's loneliness,
In all my dreams of you, in every place.

Ah, sweet, you did not, and you cannot guess
How much your love could bless,
My whole poor life, that is so sad and strange,
How one mere word its bitterness could change!
Yet wherefore should I moan for my despair,
Since, If I could, I would not have you less!"

Again the thought of you makes sweet the air,—
I kiss the winds, that toss your hair,
The bare land bloometh into garden bowers,
A sun of hope doth warm my weary hours,
And a barren scene o'ercast with blight
Is once more blossoming and fair.

"O, dear imaginings of day and night,
Ye vanish soon from sight;
Yet with your fleeting fancies serve to show,
How sweeter than all other things below,
How godly great, and gracious, love must be,
That with a thought can bring so much delight."

MISCELLANEOUS.

Count de Chambord, although in his 61st year and suffering from a slight halt in his gait, owing to a fall from his horse in early youth, still takes delight in all field sports, and follows the chase with the ardor of his ancestors. At Frohsdorf the "royal hunt" is maintained with great ceremony, the only evidence which recalls the memory of the court splendors of Versailles and Fontainebleau.

When a Boston girl is presented with a bouquet, she says:—"Oh! deliciously sweet! its fragrance impregnates the entire atmosphere of the room." A Down-east girl simply says:—"It smells scrumptious; thanks, Reuben."

During a storm at Whitchurch, Salop, a load of hay was carried away by a whirlwind for one mile; also, a great quantity of planks lying at the railway station. The line was strewn with planks, and much damage was done to telegraph posts and wires. A boy was carried half-a-mile, but not seriously injured.

The thing the women of the centuries have been waiting for! An ingenious French milliner has contrived "the ladies' blushing bonnet," in the side ribbons of which—those usually tied under the fair wearer's chin—are attached two by but powerful steel springs, ending in round pads, which are brought to bear upon the temporal arteries by the action of bowing the head, one exquisitely appropriate to modest embarrassment, and, by artificially forcing blood to the cheeks, cause them to be suffused with the crimson hue of shame" at a moment's notice. Should these ingenious head coverings become the fashion among girls of the period, it will behoove a young man about to marry to take a sly peep behind the bonnet strings of their blushing charmers immediately after proposing, in order to satisfy themselves that the heightened color by them interpreted as an involuntary admission of reciprocated affection is not due to the agency of a carefully adjusted "blushing bonnet."

A FEW EXCEPTIONS.—"Why," thundered an impassioned orator at a temperance mass meeting, "in only one year, in twelve short months, the people of the United States drank 27,869,675 gallons of whisky. How much of that hideous aggregate did you drink?" he shrieked, glaring around at the respectable vice-presidents on the platform. And in the impressive pause that followed, the corresponding secretary arose and said with the exception of the tonic drops he was compelled to take before breakfast, and the anti-malarial bitters that Dr. Bolus prescribed for her, and a little pale ale for her digestion, and a pint of beer at night which she couldn't close her eye in sleep without it, and maybe an occasional drop of brandy for the neuralgia, she had not tasted a drop of spiritual or fermentous liquids since she joined the society. And a great hush fell upon the meeting, like the voice of a man who has just been asked for the loan of ten dollars.

Rev. Dr. Tyng, the well-known evangelist clergyman of the Episcopal Church, preached a sermon in New York on Sunday evening which attracts much attention in literary and religious circles. Speaking of the reputed miracles of Lourdes, France, he said that no one dare attempt to deny that the multitude of cures took place there. The lame leaped, the deaf heard, the blind saw—it will never do in this generation to deny this authenticated fact. The Doctor himself had seen there in evidence of the genuineness of the cures which, he declared, were the effect of simple, unquestioning faith. "Call the romish system what you will," said he, "a half truth or truth wholly overladen with error, here, nevertheless, are the facts. The Roman Catholic Church is wise above all other sects of believers. I do not find it in my heart to impeach their motives, and in my puny way I am striving to attain the same results."

Women and Wine.

Of the worst foes that women has ever had to contend with, wine stands at the head. The appetite for strong drink in man has spoiled the lives of more women, ruined more hopes for them, wasted more fortunes for them, brought them more sorrow, shame, and hard-ship, than any other evil that exists. The country numbers tens of thousands, nay, hundreds of thousands of women who are widows to-day, and sit in hopeless grief, because their husbands have been slain by strong drink. There are hundreds of thousands of homes, scattered all over the land, in which women live lives of torture, labouring through all the changes of suffering that lie between the extremes of fear and despair, because those whom they love, like wine better than they do the women they have sworn to love. There are women by thousands who dread to hear at the door, the step that once thrilled them with pleasure, for that step has learned to reel under the influence of seductive poison. There are women groaning with pain, while we write these words, from bruises and brutalities inflicted by husbands made mad by drink. There can be no exaggeration in the statement made in regard to this matter, because no human imagination can create anything worse than the truth, and no pen is capable of portraying the truth. The sorrows and the horrors of a wife with a drunken husband, or a mother with a drunken son, are as near the realization of hell as can be reached in this world at least. The shame, the indignation, the sorrow, the sense of disgrace for herself and her children, the poverty (and not unfrequently the beggary) the fear and the fact of violence, the lingering, life-long struggle and despair of countless women with drunken husbands, are enough to make all women curse, and engage unitedly to oppose it everywhere as the worst enemy of their sex.
