TO RAISE WIRELESS TOWER.

New Additions to German Station at Sayville Ready.

One of two new 355 foot towers for the powerful five-wire wireless plant at Sayville, L. I., will be raised today. They were constructed on the ground and will be raised as if they were poles instead of towers of iron.

Including a new transformer house, 1,000 feet away from the operating room, four carloads of material have been used for the addition to the plant. The cable connecting the transformer house and the operating room weighs ten tons.

Much secrecy has been maintained about the work. The plant has been guarded day and night and photographers driven off repeatedly. Government reports have been employed in the construction.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

[illegible]

(Copyright, 1915, by Doubleday, Page & Company.)

"We've lost our chance, guvnor," he pointed out. "Look!"

Quest set his teeth and gripped the inspector's arm. The place where the Durham had been anchored was empty. Already, half a mile down the river, with a trail of light behind and her siren shrieking, the Durham was standing out seawards.

CHAPTER XVIII.

"GETTING kind of used to these courthouse shows, aren't you, Lenora?" Quest remarked, as they stepped from the automobile and entered the house in Georgia Square.

Lenora shrugged her shoulders. She was certainly a very different looking person from the tired, trembling girl who had heard Macdougal sentenced not many weeks ago.

"Could any one feel much sympathy," she asked, "with those men? Red Gallagher, as they all called him, is more like a great brute animal than a human being. I think that even if they had sentenced him to death I should have felt that it was quite the proper thing to have done."

"Too much sentiment about those things," Quest agreed, clipping the end off a cigar. "Men like that are better off the face of the earth. They did their best to send me there."

"Here's a cablegram for you," Lenora exclaimed, bringing it over to him. "Mr. Quest, I wonder if it's from Scotland Yard!"

Quest tore it open. They read it together, Lenora standing on tiptoe to peer over his shoulder:

"Stowaway answering in every respect your description of Craig found on Durham. Has been arrested, as desired, and will be taken to Hamblin House for identification by Lord Ashleigh. Reply whether you are coming over and full details as to charge."

"Good for Scotland Yard!" Quest declared. "So they've got him eh? All the same, that fellow's as slippery as an eel. Lenora, how should you like a trip across the ocean, eh?"

"I should love it," Lenora replied. "Do you mean it, really?"

Quest nodded.

"The fellow's fooled me pretty well," he continued, "but somehow I feel that if I get my hands on him this time, they'll stay there till he stands where Red Gallagher did to-day. I don't feel content to let any one else finish off the job. Got any relatives over there?"

"I have an aunt in London," Lenora told him, "the dearest old lady you ever saw. She'd give anything to have me make her a visit."

Quest moved across to his desk and took up a sailing list. He studied it for a few moments and turned back to Lenora.

"Send a cable off at once to Scotland Yard," he directed. "Say—'Am sailing on Lusitania to-morrow. Hold prisoner. Charge very serious. Have full warrants.'"

Lenora wrote down the message and went to the telephone to send it off. As soon as she had finished, Quest took up his hat again.

"Come on," he invited. "The machine's outside. We'll just go and look in on the professor and tell him the news. Poor old chap, I'm afraid he'll never be the same man again."

"He must miss Craig terribly," Lenora observed, as they took their places in the automobile, "and yet, Mr. Quest, it does seem to me a most amazing thing that a man so utterly callous and cruel as Craig must be should have been a devoted and faithful servant to any one through all these years."

Quest nodded.

"I am beginning to frame a theory about that. You see, all the time Craig has lived with the professor he has been a sort of dabbler with him in his studies. Where the professor's gone right into a thing and understood it, Craig, you see, hasn't managed to get past the first crust. His brain wasn't educated enough for the subjects into the consideration of which the professor may have led him. See what I'm driving at?"

"You mean that he may have been mad?" Lenora suggested.

"Something of that sort," Quest assented. "Bunge was the man for that. The professor's a bit of a terrible, you know. There are some queer stories about the work he got done in a certain apartment in South America. Bunge is his and What he has gone through in some of those foreign countries, no one knows. Quite enough to unbalance any man of ordinary nerve and temperament.

"The professor, I guess, is certainly sane. Leaving unnoticed.

"Previously Quest agreed, "but then, you see, one brain was big enough to start with. It could hold all there was for it to hold. It's like pouring stuff into the wrong receptacle when a man like Craig tries to follow him. However, that's only a theory. Here we are, and the front door wide open. I wonder how our friend's feeling today."

They found the professor on his hands and knees upon a dusty floor, carefully arranged before him were the bones of a skeleton, each laid in some appointed place. He had chart on either side of him, and a third one on an easel. He looked up a little impatiently at the sound of the opening of the door, but when he recognized Quest and his companion the annoyance passed from his face.

"Say, are we disturbing you, Mr. Ashleigh?" Quest inquired.

The professor rose to his feet and brushed the dust from his knees.

"I shall be glad of a rest," he said simply. "You see what I am doing? I am trying to reconstruct from memory—and a little imagination, perhaps—the important part of my missing skeleton. It's a wonderful problem which those bones might have solved, if I had been able to place them fairly before the scientists of the world. Do you understand much about the human frame, Mr. Quest?"

Quest shook his head promptly.

"Still life doesn't interest me," he

MRS. BEIDEL TELLS WOMEN

How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Kept Her in Health for 14 Years.

Shippensburg, Pa.—"It was several years ago that I started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I then suffered terribly every month. My husband bought me a bottle of it and it helped me right away. Then after my second child was born I had a female trouble very badly, and I used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and in a short time was cured and have been in excellent health since. I always praise the Compound whenever I have an opportunity, as I know it helped me and will help others. Lately I have given the Compound to my daughter, and I wish all suffering women would take it and be convinced of its worth."—Mrs. James A. Beidel, 118 N. Penn Street, Shippensburg, Pa.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., seem to prove this fact.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.—Advt.
