WHERE CAN I GET GOOD PRINTING DONE?

The address below answers the question. Not a man in the place but is thoroughly skilled. Not an old font of type in the house. Electricity is the motive power, and, typical of the ruling spirit of the place—quickness and up-to-dateness. A poor job of printing never gets past the threshold. RAIN LATE TONIGHT.

Increasing Northeasterly Winds, Becoming High Tomorrow.

Forecast till 8 p.m. Sunday—For the District of Columbia, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia, rain late tonight and Sunday; increasing northeasterly winds, becoming high Sunday; fair Monday.

Weather conditions and general forecast—The gulf disturbance is central this morning near Mobile, where the barometric pressure is 29.56 inches.

Heavy rain has fallen in the middle and west gulf coast districts, and the rain area has extended eastward to South Carolina and northward to Tennessee.

The future course of this disturbance will be northeastward toward the middle Atlantic coast. Present conditions indicate that the storm will increase in intensity as it advances, and that rain and strong northeasterly, shifting to easterly and southerly gales, will prevail on the south Atlantic coast tonight, and northeasterly gales on the middle Atlantic coast Sunday. By Sunday night the winds will probably become high from north to northeast over the southern New England coast. In the middle and west gulf states the wind will diminish in force from the northwest, with cooler and fair weather Sunday.

In the Ohio valley and Tennessee rain will be followed Sunday afternoon by clearing weather.

Storm signals are displayed at Mobile and Pensacola, and from Jacksonville to West Point, Va., and advisory messages have been sent to points on the middle Atlantic coast.

The following heavy precipitation (in inches) has been reported during the past twenty-four hours: New Orleans, 1.18; Mobile, 1.98; Meridian, 1.36.

Records for Twenty-Four Hours.

The following were the readings of the th
