THE TRIBUNE.

Discussion on Mormonism.

Correspondence of The Tribune.

BOSTON, June 25, 1842.

Considerable excitement has been created here during the past week by a public discussion of the subject of Mormonism. It closed last night, having been continued five evenings. The disputants were Dr. West, an English gentleman, and Elder Adams, a minister of the Mormon sect.—The former is a man of strong and well cultivated intellectual powers, and, when excited, an effective speaker. He came here, as I have been informed, from New-York, for the purpose of delivering lectures in refutation of Infidelity, and is highly recommended by some of the leading clergymen of that city as well qualified for the proposed task. Elder Adams is a man of strong, but uncultivated mind, and possesses no small amount of tact and ingenuity. As a speaker, he is rough and uncouth, and treats the King's English as unmercifully as he does his own lungs.—Precisely how the parties came in conflict, I cannot tell you; but I believe the Mormon was the challenger. Marlboro Chapel was the scene of conflict, and the tickets of admission were sold for 12½ cents. The audience at first was small, but it increased as the controversy went on, until the Chapel was at last pretty well filled.

Dr West affirmed that the doctrines and principles of the Mormons involved hypocrisy, lying, fraud, treason, plunder, murder, blasphemy, &c.; and these charges he endeavored to substantiate by quotations from their writings, and by proofs drawn from other sources. The laboring oar, consequently, was in his hands, while his opponent stood in an attitude of self-defence. The former had the prejudices, and generally the deep-rooted convictions of his audience, in his favor, while the latter enjoyed, as an offset, that sympathy which the human heart involuntarily feels when a fellow man is on trial for a serious offence. In this respect, perhaps, the advantages of the conflict were as equally divided as they could have been before an audience whose opinions were chiefly on one side of the question.

During the first three evenings I was not present; but those who were, assure me that I heard the pith of the discussion on Tuesday and Friday evenings. On the former evening, the chair was occupied by "Father Taylor," as he is familiarly called, the well-known Seaman's preacher. The debate was opened by Dr. West at 3 o'clock, and closed by Elder Adams at 10; the parties occupying twenty minutes each, alternately.

Dr. West requested the Secretary to read from the Mormon Book the account of the mysterious discovery of the golden plates, and of their subsequent translation by commandment of the Lord. From this it appeared that the Mormons claim the power of working miracles, and affirm that they are directly inspired by God. Dr. West contended that this was blasphemy, and an attempt to impose upon the credulity of the people. Elder Adams admitted that it would be blasphemy if the claim were not founded in truth; but he contended that there were living witnesses that miracles had been performed by Joseph Smith and others; and he affirmed that it was contrary to Scripture to suppose that the day of miracles had gone by. To support his views, he quoted the declaration of Christ, "these signs shall follow them that believe," affirming that it was not merely a promise to the Apostles, but to the whole body of believers. He quoted for the same purpose James v. 14, 15: "Is any sick among you, let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up." The modern church, he said, was false and spurious on its own confession, as it did not even pretend to do the works which Christ said would be done by believers, and its ministers did not claim to speak from inspiration.

Dr. West ridiculed this claim of miraculous power on the part of the Mormons, and read a statement of some thirty or forty citizens of Palmyra, N. Y., and vicinity, intended to show that Joseph Smith and his associates were men destitute of moral character, and therefore unworthy of confidence. He stated also, on the authority of an individual who assisted in printing the Mormon Bible, that when it was going through the press, the workmen purposely concealed one of the sheets in order to see whether Smith could supply it by another translation from the golden plates, and thus test the genuineness of the book. This caused a great flurry, but Smith pretended to furnish another copy verbatim. On comparing, it, however, with the first, it was found to be a very different affair. This account raised a tremendous laugh at the expense of the Elder. The Doctor also told the following story to illustrate the Mormon method of working miracles. Two priests of that sect were traveling somewhere at the West. One of them, by agreement, went forward of the other, and put up at the house of a farmer for the night. After going to bed, he feigned severe sickness, and before morning apparently died. The next day the other priest also called at the same house, as a stranger, and being told of the death of his companion, avowed himself a Mormon, and told the host that he could raise the dead man to life. The farmer suspected some trick, but acquiesced in the proposals of the priest, and called in his neighbors to witness the miracle. The arrangement being completed, the farmer inquired of the Mormon if he could restore a man to life who had been dead for a long time. "O yes," he replied. "Could you do it if his head were cut off?"—"Certainly," said he, "that would make no difference. "Well, then," said the farmer, lifting his axe, as if he intended to be as good as his word, "I'll cut off this man's head before you begin." No sooner had he said this, than the dead man sprang to his feet, without any miraculous assistance whatever, exclaiming, "I an't dead—don't murder me!" The noise which followed this story was tremendous. The audience was convulsed with laughter, and made the house ring with applause.

Elder Adams declared that there was not one word of truth in these stories. They were lies, made out of whole cloth, and intended to substitute ridicule for argument. Let the part of the Mormon Bible which was concealed by the printers be compared with that book as it stands, or else let the story be branded as a silly falsehood, concocted by the priests. Let the name of the farmer alluded to, and also the names of the Mormon Elders who practised the deception alleged by his opponent, be stated. Let him give to the story a local habitation. He dared him to do it; and if he did, he (Mr. A.) would pay the expenses of bringing the persons concerned before the audience.

Dr. West said the whole question would be settled in a few months. Let his opponent work a miracle on the spot, if he had the power, and thus convince the people that he was no deceiver, but an honest man. He demanded this as a means of settling the whole controversy. A large portion of the audience appeared to consider this a reasonable demand, and the most intense curiosity was exerted to know how the Elder would get out of the difficulty. He did so, however, in a manner which fairly turned the laugh against his opponent. He affirmed that neither Christ nor his Apostles ever wrought miracles on the demand of unbelievers, as a means of convincing them of the truth; and he offered, if the Dr. would refer him to a case where the Apostles had done any thing of the kind, to do the same thing himself. It was an ungodly and adulterous generation which demanded "a sign" from Christ; but he told them that no sign would be given them, but the sign of the Prophet Jonas. Dr. West did not attempt to refer to any instance in which the Apostles had wrought a miracle, on the demand of unbelievers; and the feeling was strong throughout the audience, as I thought, that on that point, where he had so confidently expected to nail his opponent to the wall, he had signally failed. Father Taylor, however, was so excited, that he pronounced the conduct of Elder Adams to be wholly unjustifiable, and declared he would no longer preside over such a discussion; and then the meeting broke up in confusion.

Last evening, considerable time was spent in endeavoring to get some one to take the chair. Several persons were chosen, but they all declined; whereupon it was voted that the Secretary preside. The discussion then proceeded, but it was made up chiefly of positive assertion on one side and equally positive denial on the other. Most of those present, with all contempt for Mormonism, must have felt, I am sure, as I did, that the Doctor's arguments were exceedingly lame and illogical, and scarcely worth a moment's thought in connection with the serious charges which he undertook to support. He had evidently entered upon the discussion with a somewhat too high opinion of himself, and a too mean estimation of the powers of his opponent. Thinking that he would have to deal with a very gross error, he evidently had not prepared himself for the contest as he ought to have done; while his opponent was armed at all points, and found it no difficult task to answer him. The issue was not well made up. The Doctor's charges were so sweeping as to produce a feeling in the audience that they were extravagant and unjust, even if Mormonism were ever so gross a delusion. By attempting to prove too much, he failed to prove any thing clearly.

Elder Adams has determined to seize upon this as a favorable moment to spread the Mormon faith in this city, and has accordingly announced his intention to preach at Boylston Hall next Sabbath.

REVILO.

FOREST LIFE—By the Author of 'A NEW HOME.' In two volumes: New-York—G. S. Francis & Co. 252 Broadway.

The first work of Mrs. 'Mary Clavers,' the nonsse de guerre of this most agreeable writer was received with unbounded admiration by the lovers of light reading. The sketches it presented of Western modes and habits, faithful to nature as every one felt them to be, and yet adorned with the most brilliant and lively imagination, were widely read and just as widely praised.—The present work is in continuation of that; and from the slight glances we have been able to bestow upon its pages, we are inclined to believe that it will receive the same meed of deserved admiration. It is published in a neat and elegant style.

THE LADIES' MUSICAL LIBRARY, for June, just published by Geo. L. Curry, 155 Broadway, contains sixteen pages of new and fashionable music, this work is published weekly, at the moderate price of $3 a year.

THE SHIP ATALANTA —'A Passenger' writes us with reference to a paragraph in our paper, stating that the ship Atalanta, Capt. Hart, on her passage from Mobile, was scantily furnished with provisions. He says that flour was the only article lacking, and that the deficiency in this was caused by disappointment. Capt. H. had ordered enough, and was told that it had been taken on board. A fog also detained the vessel much longer than was anticipated.

NORWEGIAN EMIGRATION.—A merchant of this city received from Europe a few days since a large remittance sent in advance to aid in the expenses here of 50 Norwegians, who come out to see the country, and report. There is a great disposition in the people of Norway to emigrate to the United States, and no doubt when the report of the 50 avant couriers reaches Europe, a very large emigration may be expected from the North of Europe.

ASSOCIATION;

Or, Principles of a True Organization of Society.

☞ A Lecture will be delivered to-morrow Evening, (Wednesday) at the Lecture Hall, 411 Broadway, on the subject of the Social Elevation of the Human Race.

Compound Economies of Association.

Two principles constitute Riches:

Internal Riches, or health proportional to ages;
External Riches, or fortune proportional to classes.

Fortune guarantees us the enjoyments of life, and with health or internal Riches, a complete development of the body and senses.

A system of compound economy should speculate upon the concurrence of the two Riches,—health and fortune. It fails into simplism, if it organize a system in which they are not united and do not lend each other reciprocally their aid.

This is a defect of our Societies: the wealthy classes have less corporeal vigor than the laboring ones, who, poorly rewarded with external riches or fortune, obtain a greater degree of internal riches or health; we do not find the gout in the cabins of the poor: we find it often in the luxurious dwellings of the Rich.

The civilized Social Order establishes a conflict of the two Riches, a separation between them; for internal Riches, or health proportional to ages, is in a diverging ratio with the external, or fortune proportional to classes. The wealthy are less robust than the poor, which, in a true social point of view, is a monstrous duplicity of action. The two Riches should, according to the law of unity, be convergent; each should sustain and lead to the other. What is more false than the assemblage of two elements which thwart and cross each other!

Such is with us the action of these two Riches which are always in conflict; external riches lead to excesses, which undermine the health, or internal riches; and internal riches or vigor lead to excesses in pleasures, which are the ruin of fortune. They destroy each other reciprocally; and how dare our sages talk of unity of action and economy of means, when duplicity reigns in these two primordial branches? Can they deny that there is a discordant and simple action in the present order of things, where riches are separated from functions which procure health, and where health is lost in pleasures, which are procured by riches? Can they deny that happiness and wisdom would consist in a system which combined riches and health, and which led to both at once? Such would be the effect of Association.

Our prejudices have blinded us to the present disorder; it has been thought that Providence wished to divide its favors, and give to the laborer and the savage strength and vigor, in compensation for their privations. This sophism presents the idea of an equitable balance, but it is not the less erroneous; it is not thus that the Divinity distributes justice. He wishes nothing simple in the destiny of Man, and he does not make equilibrium consist in a divergency, but in a convergency of contrasted elements.

Such is the effects of the Series, in which the Rich obtain an equal degree of vigor with those in moderate circumstances.

Thus will be established the concurrence of vigor with wealth, a concurrence without which there is no unity of Action between the two primary branches of human happiness, internal and external Riches.

Let us point out clearly this radical error of our social guides, all falsely bent upon speculating on simple, instead of compound results.

Politicians on Riches, neglecting Health;
Moralists on Health, neglecting Riches.

The destiny of the Human Race being compound, if the mass do not attain the two riches combinedly; they draw upon themselves a compound poverty; (privation of fortune and vigor.) This is what takes place in the present state, in which we find a decline

Of the Rich, into relative poverty;
and into comparative and real debility.
Of the Poor, into real poverty;
and into relative and constrained debility. (NOTE.)

Such are the constant results of our false Social Order. The civilized man is less robust than the savage; city populations less than those of the country; in short, the civilized Social Order causes a complete divergency of the two riches, instead of their convergency and combined action.

Let us now proceed to analyze the circumstances which diminish the product of the hired Laborer. We will estimate the loss, which arises from indifference and slackness, and the value of the stimulants which Association would put in play to increase production.

INCREASE OF THE FIRST POWER.

Spirit of Property and Probity in all Relations.

The spirit of probity is one of the strongest stimulants which we know of to excite people; we may, without exaggeration, expect from the labor of a proprietor a product double that of a paid or servile workman. We see daily proofs of it; men who were slow and careless, while working for wages, become prodigies of diligence as soon as they commence operating on their own account.

The first problem of Political Economy consequently should be to endeavor to transform all the hired classes into co-interested proprietors, having an interest in the capital. This would have doubled the value of their paid day's labor, besides the advantages of dispatch.

The Laboring Classes, who work for a salary, compose three-quarters of the working population (taking the average of countries). How can we double the product of the day's labor of the other quarter composed of proprietors?

Omitting minor means, such as exemption from supervision, the active cooperation of masters and clerks in branches of industry, which they now merely oversee, we will take the most powerful lever or stimulant, that of probity, which will reign in all the relations of Association. In agriculture and manufactures the guaranty of the probity and faithfulness of agents would induce capitalists to undertake an infinite variety of operations, which they cannot now think even of attempting.

It is certain that twenty times as many fruit-trees, for example, would be cultivated, if these engaged in the pursuit were certain of not being deceived in the quality of grafts and plants, not obliged to gather the fruit at once and before maturity, from fear of thefts; and if they had, moreover, the guaranty of capital at non-usurious interest, as they would in Association, when it will not be all absorbed in speculating and stock-jobbing.

These two incentives, property and probity, will be alone more than sufficient to double the product of labor; and, in this hypothesis, a province or state containing one million of inhabitants would yield a product equal to that of one of two millions.

NOTE.—The debility of the poor is the result of their position; which forces them, in order to avoid want, to sacrifice their health, more or less, in excessive and prolonged labor, and in insalubrious workshops. They are consequently exposed to a relative and constrained debility; and nothing is more false than the imaginary equilibrium which allots health to the poor as a compensation for their poverty. They have the means of health, (bodily exercise,) but they are often forced to sacrifice it, and expose themselves to disease to escape want. Civilized minds, instinctively inclined to sophism, like to dwell on illusive compensations like those above mentioned. The truth is, that man is a being whose destiny is compound: the most either attain a double happiness—health and fortune—in an order of things designed for him by the Divinity; or a compound misery—poverty and debility—in our defective societies. The relative poverty of the rich is easily understood. With all their wealth they are deprived of an infinite variety of things absolutely necessary to their happiness, and, in the midst of their treasures, we see them dying with ennui.
