THE GREAT CLAY FESTIVAL.

MR. ROBERTSON'S SPEECH.

The following address was made by Hon. Geo. Robertson, President of the Great Festival in honor of Henry Clay, in offering the toast with which it closes:

As the organ of the neighbors of our distinguished countryman and guest, to whom they have dedicated this Kentucky Festival as a tribute of their respect for him as a man, and of their gratitude for the eminent services of his long and eventful public life, I now propose a crowning sentiment, which, as we believe, will be echoed by the united head and heart of this vast multitude, of both sexes, and of all ages and denominations.

We have assembled, my countrymen, not to worship an installed idol, nor to propitiate patronage by pouring the incense of flattery at the feet of official power, but to greet with heart and hand, an old patriot returned to the walks of private life, with a consciousness of having, through all the vicissitudes of inconstant fortune, always endeavored to do his duty to the whole country, and with the memory also of deeds of which the proudest on Earth might well be proud. (Cheers.)

By the good and the wise of all parties, who feel as they should ever feel, such an occasion as this must be approved as the offspring of emotions which should be cherished by every enlightened friend of his Country's institutions, and by every disinterested admirer of the noble of his species. We should honor those who honor us.—Distinguished services, by whomsoever rendered, should be gratefully remembered. And exalted talents are entitled to universal respect. But, when one of our own countrymen, by the force of his own genius and virtues, has risen from poverty and obscurity, and not only ennobled his own name, but illustrated that of his Country, no personal jealousy or political prejudice, should chill the homage of that Country's undivided heart. And when, as now, we behold him, a plain citizen, grown grey in the public service, and retired to his farm to live and die among us, what Republican, what Kentuckian, can rebuke the sympathy and respect here this day manifested toward him, in a manner unexampled, and far more grateful to his heart, than the offer of the highest official station on Earth! On such a day and at such a place, all, of every rank and name, might honorably unite in this common offering of cordial respect, for a fellow-citizen whom, perhaps, we shall never again see and hear as we now see and shall hear him, and who honors us as much as he can be honored by us. To the thousands here present, the scene around us is peculiarly imposing, and suggests reflections both encouraging and ennobling.

Not more than half a century has elapsed since the Indian with his tomahawk lurked in the canebrakes of our pioneer fathers. Within rather less than that eventful period, a beardless stranger was, for the first time, seen on the streets of the then little village of Lexington. Like Franklin when he first visited Philadelphia, a poor and friendless orphan boy had left his native Virginia, and come forlorn to this land of promise, to seek his fortune and fix his destiny. He leaned alone on Providence, a widowed mother's prayers, and the untutored talents with which God had been pleased to bless him. Those prayers prevailed—and that Providence and those talents sustained him in all his trials, and soon pointed him to a high and bright career, which none but the good and great can ever run with honor or success. That career he has, so far, run with a lustre unsurpassed. The Forum and the Senate have been adorned and exalted by the graceful displays of his rare genius, and the overwhelming power of his Demosthenian eloquence. His name is identified with the forensic, political, and diplomatic history of the United States for the last thirty-six years: and his mark is legible on every important act of national legislation or American policy which has been either adopted or discussed in this union, within that period. He has always been the friend of the honest laborer—the champion of domestic industry, and a sound currency—the advocate of equal rights—and the defender of the Constitution, which, though excellent as it is, might, in his judgement, still be improved by the prudent modifications of experience. His voice has been heard and his thunders felt, in the cause of civil and religious liberty, in every clime. And always and every where, the Kentuckian has been distinguished for lofty and comprehensive patriotism, republican simplicity, practical wisdom, and self sacrificing independence. The whole reading world knows and admires him as the American statesman and orator, whose moral power and self-devoting patriotism, more than once, have saved his country from impending ruin. And when, like Washington he determined to retire for ever from the theatre of public action where he had won so many civic victories for his country, and plucked so many green laurels for his own head—when he resolved to exchange the toils and troubles of public life, for the repose of retirement, the verdant lawns, the roving herd, and domestic sweets of Ashland—when, for the last time, he stood before the Senate, to make the solemn announcement, and take his everlasting leave,—not an eye was dry—not one heart unmoved: and let his political opponents say what they may, that parting scene was felt there, and here, and every where, as the separation of the soul from the body. (Great Cheering.)

The measure of his fame is now full—and ripens for posterity.

Thus, while the infant Kentucky has grown to a great and renowned State, and the small village of Lexington to a beautiful and classic city, their adopted son has also risen to an eminence in the judgement and esteem of enlightened men, which but few on earth have yet attained, or can ever hope to reach: and now, surviving almost all of those who witnessed his humble advent, he reposes, in health of body and health of mind, on the blooming honors of a political patriarch.—And here we may all behold a striking and beautiful exemplification of the hopeful tendencies of our free and equal institutions, and of the inestimable value also of talents faithfully employed and rightly directed.

Resisting the syren voice of vulgar ambition, Kentucky's adopted son faithfully served his country for that country's sake; and now, after steering the constitution from the whirlpool of Consolidation on the one side and the rocks of Dissolution on the other, the Ulysses of America has laid aside his heavy armor, and come home with no untarnished shield. He wants no Homer to exaggerate or embalm his deeds. Already stereotyped, they will tell, in all time, for themselves, without the aid of poetry or of song.

His public life illustrates the difference between the Statesman and the Politician—between the enlightened patriot who goes for the welfare and honor of his country, in defiance of all considerations of personal ease or aggrandizement, and the selfish demagogue, who, always feeling the people's pulse, or looking at the weathercock of the popular breath, counts, as the chief good on earth, his own exaltation, by any means, to some office or trust which he is not qualified to fill with honor to himself or advantage to the public. While a swarming tribe of selfish placemen and vulgar aspirants after ephemeral popularity, like common birds, have been skimming the earth and amusing the people with their versatility, by their colored plumage, and their mock notes, the orphan boy of Lexington—the self-made man of America, poised on Eagle's pinions, has soared to the pure sky, with his eyes fixed on the sun—until fatigued at last, by his airy flight, he has rested on the uplifted arm of that great Commonwealth, which is emphatically styled "the land of the free and the home of the brave." And there, on that strong right arm, let him rest in peace until, if ever, he may choose once more to try his strength in the loftier and less peaceful scenes of political life.

He has encountered the envy and obloquy inseparable from exalted living merit.. So did Socrates, and Cicero, and even our own Godlike Washington; and so must every honest patriot, who lives and acts for his country and truth. The pathway of such a patriot will ever be beset by the Cleons and Clodii of the day. But remember that his straight and narrow course is the only one which could secure for him honorable renown or the grateful remembrance of an age to come. Such has been the conduct, such the aim, and such, of course, the doom of our distinguished neighbor and friend. Ambitious, we know, he has always been. But he has been ambitious—not of office, nor of fleeting popularity—but of that sacred fame which follows and hallows noble deeds. His ambition, totally unlike that of the unprincipled egotist, has resembled rather that nobler mould in Cato or of Curtius. And this more than triumphal scene, is only the dawn of that light with which time and the approving judgement of mankind will encircle his name. Already, this day, he enjoys, in retirement, a reward which no earthly place or title could ever confer.

Men will differ in politics as in other things.—But let them honestly differ, like Christians and republicans, in a spirit of liberation and charity—and not, as untamed savages, with the brutal ferocity of hungry tigers. When we explore his whole public life, the unrelenting crusade, so spitefully and perseveringly prosecuted by some leading men against this venerable and unbending statesman, might remind us of the saying of Tacitus—that, by murdering Helvidius, and Thrasea, and Seneca, Nero expected to cut up public virtue by the roots. Could the extraction or ruin of such a man, advance the glory or promote the happiness of that country which he has so much honored and helped to save? Faultless, we admit, he has not always been. Who on earth ever was or ever will be? But had he been even perfect, imperfect men would either not have known, or knowing, not acknowledged it. Blind allegiance to party is not only the canker of liberty, but the murderer of character also. Those who look through the microscope of a party or a faction, instead of seeing for themselves, in the open sunlight of heaven, will never behold any thing as it is. Many have only seen our guest through this false medium; and they cannot, therefore, know or appreciate his true character. It is not our purpose, here or elsewhere, to vouch for the rectitude of all he ever did, or said, or thought. But we may be allowed now to say, that even those, whose estimate of him is most unfavorable, generally concede that he is high on the roll of the most distinguished men of the age, and acknowledge, moreover, that he has, through a long public life, stood steadfastly by his principles and maintained them, on all occasions, ably, boldly and manfully. Then let them judge him by the golden rule.

But whatever may be thought of him now, or whatever may be his future destiny on earth, his posthumous fame, at least, is secure. When the rival passions which have assailed him, shall have been buried at his tomb, his character as a patriot, orator and statesman, will shine forth, clear and refulgent: and like the bright setting sun of a stormy day, it will pass the horizon cloudless, spotless, and full-orbed. [Great applause.]

Identified with his country's fortune, his memory will live in the history of that country's glory—and with Washington's and Hamilton's and Madison's, and Marshall's and Patrick Henry's, it will be embalmed in the hearts of the virtuous and the wise, as long as eminent talents, signally devoted to the welfare of our race, shall be revered among men.

And, in some future age, when the young Kentuckian, with curious eye and palpitating heart, shall explore the Pantheon of illustrious Americans, soon attracted by the most honored group, he will there at once behold a graceful and majestic statue of granite, and casting an anxious glance at the sculptured pedestal, he will read, with unutterable emotions of patriotic gratitude and pride—

HENRY CLAY, OF KENTUCKY.

Without detaining you longer, I will announce the sentiment, to which the hearts of millions, now and for ages, will approvingly respond

HENRY CLAY—Founder of Ashland, Patriot and Philanthropist—the AMERICAN Statesman, and surnamed Orator of the Age—illustrious abroad, beloved at home! In a long career of eminent public service, often, like Aristides, he breasted the raging storm of passion and delusion, and by offering himself a sacrifice, saved the Republic; and now, like Cincinnatus and Washington, having voluntarily retired to the tranquil walks of private life, the grateful hearts of his countrymen will do him ample justice; but come what may, Kentucky will stand by him, and still continue to cherish and defend, as her own, the fame of a son who has emblazoned her Escutcheon with immortal renown.

NOTICE to RUPTURED PERSONS.—Dr. A. G. HULL, No. 1 Vesey street, Astor House, New-York—Persons afflicted with Ruptures may rely upon the best instrumental aid the world affords, on applying at this office, Vesey street, New-York, or at the numerous agents in the chief towns of the United States. Parents must be careful to examine the back part of Dr. Hull's Trusses, to see if they are endorsed by Dr. Hull in writing. None other are genuine or to be relied on as good. Dr. Hull guarantees cures to all otherwise healthy patients who call at his office for treatment. If the cure be not radical and permanent, so as to preclude the necessity of wearing any truss whatever, the money advanced is returned on the expiration of the term specified for the cure, whatever progress the patient may have made toward eradication.

Children under twelve years generally cured without further expense than the cost of the Truss. The radical cure has become the progressive practical improvement for more than twenty years past, in Dr. Hull's Truss Office, and is now brought to a state of unrivaled perfection.

Many treacherous agents have undertaken to vend imitations of Dr. Hull's celebrated Hinge and Pivot Truss for the easy and safe retention of Ruptures. The imitations cannot be relied on—they are made by unskillful surgeons and mechanics, and are no better than the ordinary Trusses of the market. The genuine have my full name in writing.

AMOS G. HULL & CO.

Dr. Hull hears the request of several respectable physicians, fitted up a room exclusively for Ladies, having separate entrance from the business department, wherein a lady is in constant attendance, to apply Trusses and Supporters to female patients.

THE TRUSSES and SUPPORTERS of Dr. Hull's invention continue to receive my decided preference. For twenty years past I have employed the Trusses of Dr. Hull with success. The supporter was invented in 1831 by the Dr., with my advice and approbation and I am happy to say that it is extensively adopted in Europe as well as in this country.

COUGHS, Asthma, Spitting of Blood, &c., cured by JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT.

From Atkinson's Philadelphia Evening Post.

Philadelphia, Aug. 16, 1838.

Mr. Atkinson—Dear Sir: A few weeks ago I noticed in your paper an account of the surprising effect of Jayne's Carminative, in restoring a great number of passengers on board of a Mississippi steamboat to perfect health, who were affected by a violent Bowel Complaint. I was glad to see you notice it so kindly; you may rest assured it deserves the praise bestowed upon it. The benefit I have received from his medicines, more especially his Expectorant, induces me to state my case to you for the benefit of those who are afflicted in the same way. It has been my misfortune, sir, to labor under a Cough and Asthmatic oppression for more than half a century. When a soldier in the American camp, in 1776, I with many others (owing to great exposure) had a violent attack of disease of the lungs, by which I was disabled from duty for a long time. Since that period, until recently, I have never been free from a violent cough and difficulty of breathing. Year after year I have expectorated over a gill a day, often much more, and sometimes raked with blood. For months together, night after night, I have had to sit or be bolstered up, to obtain my breath. The weakness or debility caused by such constant expectoration, frequently brought me to a state bordering on death. It has been a matter of astonishment to my family and friends that I am here to write this to you. I have had skillful physicians to attend me, and every thing done that was thought likely to give relief, without any beneficial effect. Last winter I had another very severe attack of inflammation of the lungs, which I fully expected would be the last. I then considered my case as past the aid of medicine, when I was persuaded to call in Dr. Jayne. With the assistance of Divine Providence, through him I was once more raised from my bed; but the cough and wheezing wearied me day and night. He advised me to use his Expectorant. I did so, with a strong hope that as it had cured many of my acquaintances of various diseases of the lungs, it might at least mitigate my sufferings. Need I say how gratified I feel? It has effectually cured me. As soon as I commenced taking it I found it reached my case, and I began to breathe with more freedom. My expectoration became easy, and my cough entirely left me. I now feel as well as ever I did in my life, and better than I have for the last sixty years. Last summer I spit a good deal of blood; now, thank God I am perfectly cured. Now, sir, after suffering so long, and finding at last such signal relief from Dr. Jayne's Expectorant, I feel anxious to inform my fellow citizens where relief may be had. If you think this worthy of a place in your paper, you will oblige me by noticing it.

DANDRUFF or Loss of Hair is caused by a languid or obstructed circulation in the small blood vessels which supply the scalp and hair with nourishment, in consequence of which the perspiration becomes thick and clammy, and dries on the surface, forming a crust called dandruff, which clogs up the pores of the skin and by its pressure against the roots of the hair prevents it from receiving sufficient nourishment to retain vitality. The hair then becomes harsh and unpleasant, changes color and falls off. This unhealthy affection is very speedily and effectually cured by Jayne's Hair Tonic, which revives the dormant powers of the surface vessels, removes the dandruff, and produces a new and healthy growth of hair to supply the only; and baldness is prevented or removed where it already exists.

The following certificate is selected, which sufficiently proves its extraordinary virtues:

Messrs. A. B. & D. Sands: Gentlemen—As an act of justice to you and Dr. Jayne, I send you this certificate to inform you of the invaluable benefit my wife has received from the use of Dr. Jayne's Hair Tonic. She lost not only her entire head of hair, but her eyebrows also, and after trying various remedies with no benefit, she used Dr. Jayne's Hair Tonic. She used two bottles before we could discover the hair had started, and commencing with the third it started to grow not freely, and in a few weeks head and eyebrows were covered with a third growth of fine black hair better than she had lost. I think it was entirely produced by the use of the Tonic, and would recommend it to all who need a similar remedy. Truly yours,

JOHN N. JACKSON.

S. O. RICHARDSON'S BITTERS.—GOOD NEWS FOR THE SICK.—The subscriber takes pleasure in communicating to his fellows, the happy results he has experienced from the use of Dr. S. O. Richardson's Sherry Bitters. During the last four years, having had occasion to resort to many experiments for the restoration of my health, and having experienced much inconvenience from a general nervous debility and consequent disorders and loss of appetite, I at length fortunately procured a bottle of Dr. R's Bitters, and from actual experience can recommend them to the public as a most agreeable and effectual restorative of health and bodily vigor.—Having also had occasion to witness their effects on many of my friends and neighbors, I can testify to their beneficial effects. Dr. Richardson needs no encomium with those who are personally or experimentally acquainted with him, sustaining as he does a high reputation for his knowledge and skill in the medical department. To those who know him not, I can give no more favorable introduction than advising them to make immediate use of a bottle of his very valuable Bitters. W. G. SIMMOND.

From the Palladium, New Haven.

West Killingly, Conn., June 18, 1840.

Dr. S. O. Richardson,

Sir—Having been, for the last few years, very much debilitated and much out of health other wise, and had the advice of twenty or thirty of the best physicians in Charleston, S. C., New York, Saratoga Springs, Boston, and a number of other places, I was in Boston, on the 4th of last March, and called at your office and bought a bottle of your Sherry Bitters. After I returned home, I bought more. I commenced gaining from the very first, and I have taken three bottles, and am now well. My case was despaired of as certainly incurable; but in three months, I have gained just 37 pounds—which is surprising, as I have eaten nothing but bread and milk. I still continue the same. Your medicine is selling well and doing much good.

Very respectfully yours,

C. CHAMBERLIN.

HIGHLY Important to Farmers, Plant ers and Horticulturists.—The Connecticut Chemical Whale Oil Soap may be considered at the present moment the best preparation that ever was compounded for the total destruction of every species of insects infesting the vegetable kingdom—maggots, slugs, roseburs, peach, nectarine, apple and pear tree insects, cut and army worms, aphis, cabbage lice, and all the smaller insects which are so destructive to indigenous and exotic flowers, such as the oleander, cactus ficus, cycas, mosaic-leaved begonia, gerania, erica, tropaeoleum, &c. &c. by a proper application, be thoroughly exterminated. Besides, the extraordinary cheapness, a most important item in economy, renders it accessable for all purposes on a large scale: 1,000 peach trees, or 50 acres of land, may be kept free from the marauding insects for the trifling expense of one dollar.

Farmers raising corn, oats, rye, potatoes, turnips, cabbages, may, at the expense of a few dollars, realize hundreds by saving their fields from the devastations of the vermin. The Compound Chemical Whale Oil Soap may be had in bulk, or in jars of four pounds, a dozen of which are packed in a box. Apply to
