THE POET'S RESOLVE.

BY C. P. CRANCH.

Era the Spring leaves were on the trees,
Or ere the chill had left the breeze,
I late was wandering, ill at ease,

Near a green city park, whose gates
Frowned on the poor, like turnpike rates,
But oped to lords of rich estates—

Through iron rails the dust and din
Came whirling by, and sweeping in,
Making strange discord with the green:

But in the midst a little bird,
Upon a leafless branch I heard,
And straight my heart within me stirred.

I said, 'Sweet bird, first voice of Spring,
Like me, thou hast thy song to sing;
But scarce hast heart to do a thing

So all unfitting place and time:
These dull, dead walls of brick and lime,
And life within them, build no rhyme.

The world we make untunes the string
On which the poet fain would sing:
His voice is dumb, though it be Spring.

A world of customary rust,
A thoroughfare of noise and dust,
Blown all about by every gust;

A harbor for insipid cant—
Void wastes unknowing what they want—
A service heartless all, and scant,

Brought to the shrine of truth and good—
Weak purposes half understood—
Tame slavery to every mood.

For tones of love, fault-finding sneers;
For courage, unavailing fears;
For truth and beauty, asses' ears.

And then the worldly grinding cares,
The pitfalls and the sugared snares
That catch our spirits unawares.

These clods defile with mud the fount
Whence clear poetic waters mount;
We have no visions to recount.

Hence grows the poet sleek and tame,
Fed on the world's gross praise and blame,
Till he forgets for what he came.

His eye is dull to heavenly light;
He hath no word of lofty might:
Far better die than thus to write.'

Now while the bird sang out aloud,
I passed from underneath this cloud,
And found a purpose, noble, proud.

I will not, like these fettered broods
Of poets, speak from vulgar moods,
But court divinest solitudes.

And though this life around be cold,
Tame, customary, sensual, old;
I will at least be free and bold.

Like thee, sweet bird, amid the din
Of cities, I will yet begin
Music that springs from life within;

Thoughts that from deep infinitude
Come darting down with strength endued,
Shall flock around me many-hued.

Words of sincerity and truth;
Tones that will inly cheer and soothe,
Persuasive as the smile of youth.

Not from the fashions of my time—
From Beauty's own fresh garden prime,
I'll cull the thoughts that fill my rhyme.

And these shall kindle quick, and spread
Responsive radiance round his head,
Who feels that Poesy is not dead.

And thus shall work to issues fine,
Not from a virtue thine or mine,
But because steeped in truth divine.

April 5th, 1845.

THE BOSTON APOSTLE OF TEMPERANCE.—The following extract from a memorial lately presented to the Legislature, and published in the Boston Courier, exhibits to view the work of a true philanthropist—himself a poor mechanic, but who has emphatically gone about doing good in his generation:

"In the summer of 1841, JOHN AUGUSTUS, a man in humble life, now well known to the friends of temperance in Boston, and who deserves to be throughout the State, visited the Police Court in Boston, and being very much interested in the case of a poor man, who, for the vice of drunkenness, had been sentenced to the House of Correction, stepped forward and offered to become bail for him. His proposal was accepted. He paid out of his own pocket, the fees of court, amounting to a few dollars, and took the condemned man with him out of the court room. He persuaded him to sign the pledge, furnished him with food and lodgings, and at last secured employment for him, and from henceforth the rescued drunkard became an industrious and sober citizen.

Mr. Augustus, inspired by the success of his first attempt, and impelled by the yearnings of his noble heart, continued his visit to the Police Court, and from August, in the year 1841, to February of the present year, he has rescued from the jaws of the House of Correction, and from the fellowship of convicted felons, one hundred and seventy-six men and fifty-six women—in all, two hundred and thirty-two human beings,—a large portion of whom, but for the vice of intemperance, would have enjoyed an unquestionable right to the general regard of society. Fortunately for this benevolent attempt to stand between the drunkard and the customary course of law, Mr. Augustus has preserved a careful record of every case in which he has interested himself, and he is thus enabled to furnish an intelligent account of a large portion of the persons who, by his means, have been saved from confinement in South Boston. Full three-fourths of the number, or about one hundred and seventy-five, are now temperate and orderly citizens, and are gaining a respectable livelihood. Above one half of the whole number were residents of Boston, and the other half were temporary visiters to the city from the country and from neighboring States. The proportion of foreigners was much larger of the men than the women. The amount of costs paid by Mr. Augustus, for the release of these persons, is $976 61. This amount has nearly all been paid back to him by the persons thus rescued. By the minute and unquestionable records kept by Mr. Augustus, rising eight-tenths of all the persons sent to the House of Correction are sent there for drunkenness. Through his Samaritan efforts, the number of commitments for this dreadful vice has been largely reduced,—and besides the diminished expense consequent upon such reduction, the community has been incalculably blessed by the change.

The following statement will show the actual reduction in the commitments to the House of Correction for drunkenness, since the Washingtonian reform commenced in Boston, but, especially as resulting from the efforts of Mr. Augustus: —In 1841, they were 605—in 1842, they were 541—in 1843, 456—in 1844, 407. On the first of January of the present year, the number of persons remaining in the House of Correction, committed by the Police Court, was only 123; of which number 110 were committed for drukenness, viz: 47 males and 63 females, all other offences being but 13. During the last year, Mr. Augustus has saved 120 persons from the House of Correction, 20 of whom have since been sentenced to the House of Correction; the remaining 100 are doing well. It should be added that, within a few months, a number of the "merchant princes," and other eminent philanthropists of Boston, have given Mr. Augustus a substantial testimonial of their respect for his unwearied and invaluable services. Previous to this liberal act, Mr. Augustus had relied upon his own scanty resources, and had found it exceedingly difficult to carry into effect his praiseworthy labors.

A NEW CHAPTER ON THE MEANNIG OF FLOWERS.—The morning of the last 4th of July witnessed a scene full of instruction. The female convicts of a New-York Penitentiary were assembled. Their emotions testified that the matron spake not in vain. The well of their feelings had been opened—the waters, long restrained, gushed out. And what said the merciful matron? What could she have said to roll the stone from the well's mouth? Her words were only a preface—a preface to a letter of the Superintendent. And now she reads. Hear how they sob!—Like children weeping to their mother! Ah! human nature, however depraved, retains always a mite of its Maker. And what said the Superintendent? He pitied the condition of the poor wretched women—that they could not partake in the joyous festivity. He sent them each a boquet of flowers, to remind them of the days of their innocency. And this caused the tears to flow from the eyes of the unhappy convicts. "Come," said the matron, "take courage; you may gather them yet in the gardens." She was answered by sobs of conviction. Heaven bless the good Superintendent. [N. Y. Mirror.
