THE TRIBUNE.

GO FORTH INTO THE FIELDS.

BY WM. J. PARODIE.

Go forth into the fields,
Ye dwellers in the city's troubled mart!
Go forth and know the influence nature yields,
To soothe the wearied heart.

Leave ye the feverish strife,
The jostling, eager, self-devoted throng —
Ten thousand voices, waked anew to life,
Call you with sweetest song.

Hark!—from each fresh-clad bough,
Or blissful soaring in the golden sky,
Glad birds, with joyous music, bid you now
To Spring's loved haunts repair.

The silvery-gleaming rills
Lure, with soft murmure, from the grassy lea,
Or, gaily dancing down the sunny hills,
Call loudly in their glee!

And the young, wanton breeze,
With breath all odorous from her blossomy chase,
In voice low whispering mong the embowering trees,
Woos you to her embrace.

Go—breathe the air of heaven,
Where violets meekly smile upon your way;
Or on some pine-crowned summit, tempest-riven,
Your wandering footsteps stray.

Seek ye the solemn wood,
Whose giant trunks a verdant roof uprear,
And listen, while the roar of some far flood
Thrills the young leaves with fear!

Stand by the tranquil lake,
Sleeping 'mid rocky banks abrupt and high,
Save when the wild bird's wings its surface break,
Chequering the mirrored sky;—

And if within your breast
Hallowed to Nature's touch, one chord remain,
If aught save worldly honors find you blest,
Or hope of sordid gain—

A strange delight shall thrill,
A quiet joy brood o'er you like a dove;
Earth's placid beauty shall your bosom fill,
Stirring its depths with love.

O, in the calm, still hours,
The holy Sabbath hours, when sleeps the air, [flowers
And heaven, and earth, decked with her beauteous
Lie hushed in breathless prayer:

Pass ye the proud fane by,
The vaulted aisles, by flaunting folly trod,
And, 'neath the temple of the uplifted sky,
Go forth and worship God!
