☞ Ewyn's Patent Stone-Dressing Machine—PATENTED Dec. 4, 1849.—This Machine is designed for dressing stone for buildings, for canal locks, for railroad masonry, for monuments and obelisks, for anything where rectangular or rectilineal work is required. Some idea of the construction of this Machine may be derived from the following description, though an engraving of it would make the description much more forcible: Firm, upright supports on both sides of the carriage on which the stone rests, sustain the chisels, and, also, the revolving hammers, or cylinder back of the chisels, cast with cams upon it, which set in a spiral form. The stone is placed upon the carriage, which resembles somewhat the carriage of a saw-mill, and is moved forward and backward, on the same principle, substantially. This carriage, with the stone upon it, passes between the supports and under the chisels. The chisels, which are raised or lowered at pleasure to suit the thickness of the stone, as well as the depth of the chip required, are pressed back by the stone so as to come within the reach of the revolving cams, which drive them forward by a sharp blow, which strips the stone. The forward movement of stone presses the chisels back again instantly, which are again driven forward as before. This process goes on till the stone is finished. As the cams are set in a spiral form, no two chisels act at once; yet the blows come in such quick succession, (being, under full motion 1,600 a minute on each one,) that to the eye of the spectator, they all appear to work at the same time, so that in a gang of twenty chisels some thirty-two thousand blows are struck in the space of a single minute. It will be perceived, even on a slight examination, that this Machine can be made any length or width desired;—that a machine of sufficient dimensions to dress a stone twenty feet long and ten feet wide, will cost but little more than one that can cut only as many inches;—that the power must be nearly the same in both cases, and that a wide stone will move forward as fast as a narrow one, and receive the dressing as quick—the time required depending not on the width of the stone, but upon its forward motion, and the revolutions of the multiplex hammer. The chisels may be fed faster or slower, to suit the nature of the stone. Hard, Italian marble, or dense, hard lime-stone or granite, may be driven forward two feet a minute; while American marble, and all varieties of sandstone, may be driven from two and a half to three feet per minute. The thickness of the chip may be varied at pleasure, from next to nothing to two or three inches, according to what is required, the nature of stone, the weight of the hammers, and the amount of motive power applied. The front chisels reduce the stone to a horizontal surface; the rear ones smooth it. The first gang leave a sharp, well-defined corner, and a surface slightly corded lengthwise of the stone, rendering it preeminently suitable for canal locks and railroad masonry. The angle of the chisels may be varied at will, even while in operation, to suit different qualities of stone, or different places (shaky, cross-grained, or overburnt,) in the same stone. Thus it will be seen that the cutting done by this Machine is performed on the same principle, substantially, as that of hand-cutting. It does as good work as can be done by hand for all plain surfaces, and can be easily adapted to the cutting of rectilineal moldings. As the chisels set in a right line across the stone, and are held perfectly true and steady, their durability is greatly increased. When worn on one side, they may be turned over, and turned and turned again, till they need a second hardening. A Machine with both gangs of chisels, costs from $350 to $1,000, according to its dimensions and weight. One ample to dress a stone ten feet long and two feet wide, may cost $600. A five or six horse power is ample to drive one Machine, and one Machine, properly managed, with proper appliances, and driven up to its full capacity, will dress a thousand surface feet of stone in the working hours of a single day, saving the labor of fifty men, who can be more profitably employed upon ornamental work. The American Stone-Dressing Company congratulate themselves and the public in being able to offer for sale Rights to make, use and vend, to be used any where within the United States, and their Territories, EAYRS'S Patent Stone-Dressing Machine. It is unnecessary to apprise American citizens that the introduction of such a machine into general use is a matter of much importance—of much importance to all classes: to the builder, the laborer, the landlord, the tenant, the man of real estate, the quarry-owner, the great public. Parties wishing to secure Rights will find their applications promptly attended to by the subscriber, No. 62 William-st., New-York.

W. A. WOODWARD, President.

One of the Machines is now at Roach's Saw-Mill, No. 138 Bank-st., where it may be seen in operation from 9 to 12 o'clock A. M., and from 2 to 5 o'clock P. M.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

This is an intensely interesting narrative of the career of a gay youth. Once taken up, the readers will not be apt to lay it down until he has followed the "Fortunes and Misfortunes of Harry Racket Scapegrace" to the end. The chase after the Scapegrace, that the author gives to the reader, is an exciting and lively one. [Dispatch

One of the most sparkling books of the season; for vivid pictures of bold and reckless daring, and dashing adventure, it has never been excelled. The author has unrolled a glorious panorama, which are all presented in striking colors. [Baltimore Republican.

This is the most racy, sparkling, delightful book that has appeared since that inimitable novel Frank Fairlegh, with which, for fun, frolic and pathos, it is entitled to be ranked as a companion. [Atheneum.

For those who have dwelt on the fascinating pages of Frank Fairlegh, decidedly the best novel of its day, a rich treat is in store in the perusal of Harry Racket Scapegrace, a novel of the same delightful school; full of generous thoughts, romantic incidents and wild, rollicking adventures, fun, frolic and glee. It is a book that must have the most unbounded popularity. [Pathfinder.
