I was wounded in the leg at the battle of Stone River, Dec. 31st, 1862. My blood was poisoned from the effects of the wound, and the leg swelled to double its natural size, and remained so for many years. The poison extended to my whole system, and I suffered a thousand deaths. Nothing did me any good until I took Swift's Specific, which took the poison out of my system, and enabled me to feel myself a man again. S. S. S. is the remedy for blood poison. THE PAN-AMERICANS.

Columbus Dispatch.

Half a speech, half a meal,
Half a sleep—onward
Into more food and talk
Rode the one hundred.
"Come, Pan-Americans:
Come, and let's shake your han's."
So, on to stew and shake
Rode the one hundred.

"Come, Pan Americans!"
Did they reject the plans?
Not though they all were full
And their vests saundered,
Theirs not to make reply,
Theirs not to reason why,
Theirs but to eat and fly,
Into the natural gas
Rode the one hundred.

Banquets to right of them,
Banquets to left of them
Banquets in front of them
While a world wondered,
Stormed at with word and wine,
Bravely they strive to shine,
But eating shortens breath
And men are talked to death—
Suffering one hundred.

THE CHINAMAN'S QUEUE.

What it Signifies—To Pull it is an Insult, to Cut it off a Grave Crime.

Youth's Companion.

The queue is not only the badge or mark of Chinese; it is a sign of Chinese manhood. In infancy and childhood the head of either clean-shaven and kept as smooth and shining as a billiard-ball, or patches of hair are left to grow in circles helter-skelter upon its surface, and from each sticks up a little tuft of braid, as though the blood, in its excess of vitality, was sending out the sprouts of half a dozen queues.

It is only when the boy reaches the age of 13 or 14 years that these "baby queues" are shaved off and he is formally invested with the sober queue of manhood.

But the queue, although the badge of a Chinese man, is not Chinese. It is a foreign importation, and, compared with other things in China, is a modern and recent fashion. It is Tartar, or Mongolian, and was brought into the Empire only about three hundred years ago by the present rulers, who themselves, are foreigners.

Prior to that time the Chinese did not shave the head, but dressed their hair much as we do ours. But, when the country was conquered by its present rulers, a decree was issued that all good subjects of the new Emperor should shave the head and wear a queue. This immediately aroused an intense excitement and bitter opposition throughout the whole empire.

To wear a queue was regarded as degrading and as a mark of slavery to a foreign tyrant. Mobs and riots occurred, and for a long time there was much trouble, and it seemed doubtful if the new fashion could be enforced.

But the Tartar Emperor met the difficulty with that shrewdness and tact which has made his name historical in China as the ablest and wisest of all her rulers, ancient or modern.

He issued a further decree, in which he forbade persons convicted of serious crime to wear the queue, and in which he required his officers to cut off the queues of all such persons and not to allow them to shave their heads.

Thus he made the queue a mark of respectability, and his new subjects were soon as anxious to adopt it as they had been determined in their opposition. To this day in China and among the Chinese a full head of hair and the absence of a queue is the badge of a criminal.

This will explain to you the reason for the intense opposition among the Chinese in this country to any interference with their right to wear a queue, a right which they have defended in more than one instance in our courts of law.

The queue has now become an object of almost superstitious reverence among the Chinese. It is combed and dressed with the greatest care, enlarged and lengthened with horse hair and silk, wound about the head at times, and covered to keep it from the dust. In fact, it is generally treated as an object of dignity and honor.

The Chinese boy longs for it, as the Yankee boy does for trousers with pockets in them. To pull it is an insult, and to cut it off is a grave crime severely punished by law.

THE WELL-BRED GIRL.

What She Is Like and How She May Be Readily Distinguished.

Do you know many well-bred girls? asks the Philadelphia Times. Oh, they can always be told.

A well-bred girl thanks the man who gives her a seat in the street car, and does it in a quiet and not in an effuse way.

She doesn't turn round to look after gamblers or posing actors on the street, and she doesn't think that her good looks are causing the men to stare at her.

She doesn't wear all her jewelry in the day-time, and she understands that diamond rings, ear rings, and bracelets were intended for the evening alone.

She doesn't go to supper after the theatre is over alone with a man.

She does not declare that she never rides in street cars.

She does not accept a valuable present from any man unless she expects to marry him.

She does not talk loud in public places.

She does not speak of her mother in a sarcastic way, and she shows her the loving deference that is her due.

She does not want to be a man and she doesn't try to imitate him by wearing stiff hats, smoking cigarettes, and using an occasional big, big D.

She doesn't say she hates women, and she has some good, true friends among them.

She doesn't wear boots without their buttons or a frock that needs mending.

She doesn't scorn the use of the needle, and expects some day to make clothes for very little people who will be very dear to her.

That's the well-bred girl; she's the sort that you want for your wife, and the one who will not want to be an actress, but who will be faithful through sickness and through health, through sorrow and, if need be, through shame; who will never waver in her love, and in whom the heart of her husband may safely trust.

A number of the specialties made marked advances, and the Granges were also prominent late in the day for strength displayed.
