DAILY CRESCENT.

POOR FRAY'S SOLILOQUY.

Without any female lodger in stairs,
Without thought in him who lodges under.

Don't they, tho'? Not a deuced thing have I been able to do since that little gipsy took the room opposite, about a week ago! Pat—pat—pat, go those little feet over the floor till I am as nervous as a cat in a china closet, and (confounded pretty feet they are, too, for I caught a glimpse of them going up stairs.) Then I can hear her—a rocking-chair creak, as she sits there sewing and keeping singing "Love not—love not." (Just as if a fellow could help it.) Wish she wasn't quite so pretty; it makes me feel decidedly uncomfortable. Wonder if she has any great six-footer of a brother, or a cousin, with a sledge-hammer fist? Wish I was her washer-woman, or the little nigger who brings her breakfast; she wouldn't faint away on the stairs; wish the house would ketch fire to-night! Here I am in this great barn of a room, (all alone,) chair and things set square up against the wall; no little feminine firin round; I shall have to buy a second hand bonnet, or a little pair of galoss boots, to cheat myself into the delusion that "there's two of us." Wish that little gipsy won't shy us a rabbit! I can't meet her on the stairs, if I die for it; I've upset my ink-stand a dozen times, hopping up when I thought I heard her coming. Wonder if she knows when she sits vegetating there that Shakspeare, or Sam Slick, or somebody, says that "happiness is born a twin!" dares if she don't I'm the missionary that will enlighten her! Wonder if she earns her living! (poor little soul!) It's time I had dickeys, by Christopher! Sitting there pricking her fingers with that murderous needle! If she was moving on my dickeys it would be worth while now! That's it—by Jove! I'll get her to make some dickeys; don't want an any more than Satan wants holy water, but that's neither here nor there. I shall insist upon her taking the measure of my throat! bachelors have to be right fussy. There's a pretty bottle of fish now: either she'll have to stand on a cricket, or I shall have to get on my knees to her. Solomon couldn't fix any thing better; deuce take me if I couldn't say the right thing then! This fitting dickeys is a work of time too. Dickeys isn't to be got up in a hurry.

Hallow! there's the door-bell! there's a big trunk thumped down in the entry! Is Mrs. Legare at home? Mrs. Legare!! I like that now! Have I been in love a whole week with Mrs. Legare? Never mind, may be she's a widow! Tramp, tramp, up comes those masculine feet up stairs—handsome fellow, too!! Nebuchadnezzar!

If I ever heard a kiss in my life I heard one then! I won't stand it!—it's an invasion of my rights; I'll listen at the door as I'm a sinner! What right have sea captains on shore, I'd like to know? Confound it all! Well, I always knew women wer'nt worth thinking of; a set of deceitful little monkeys; changeable as a rainbow, noisy as magpies, and full of the "Old Harry" all the time! There's "Delilah" now; didn't she take the strength out of Sampson? and wer'nt "Sissra" and "Judith" born fiends, and didn't the little minx of a "Herodias" dance John the Baptist's head off? Didn't Sarah "raise Cain" with Abraham, till he packed Hagar off? Then there was—well, the less said of her the better! but didn't Eve, the foremother of the whole concern, have one talk too many with the "old serpent!" Of course, she didn't do nothing else! Glad I never set any of my young affections on any o'em! Where's my cigar case? How tormented hot this room is!
