"NARROW PARTISANSHIP."

Some Democratic wiseacres have made the discovery that President Hayes is a "narrow partisan," and give as evidence, that he appointed all Republicans to the Census Supervisorships in Ohio. Of course when such a charge is made by a sensible man he expects only those to believe it who are utterly ignorant of the facts. As to the Ohio Supervisors, it has never been claimed that they were not honest, capable men. They were rejected by a Democratic Senate because they were Republicans. No other reason was given.

But now as to the facts bearing upon the President's alleged "narrow partisanship." We undertake to say that the records will show that he has appointed more Democrats to office than all the Democratic Presidents from Gen. Jackson down appointed from the party opposed to them. Who ever heard of a Democratic President appointing a Whig or a Republican to any office of honor or profit? Go into States where there are Democratic Governers. Did any one ever hear of one of them appointing a Republican to office? No such a thing was ever heard of. If Samuel J. Tilden had been elected President in 1876, does any one suppose that he would now appoint a single Republican Supervisor of the Census in any State in the Union? The charge of "narrow partisanship" comes with an ill grace from any Democratic politician.

THE Charleston News and Courier has published a long and interesting paper concerning the cotton factories of South Carolina from which we condense the following: There are 17 cotton factories in the State, which have a capital of $2,288,600; they have 95,438 spindles and 1,933 looms. They produce 101,338 yards of cloth and 17,183 pounds of yarn each full working day, and consume in the same time 54,049 pounds of raw cotton. They have in their direct employ 2,296 operatives, on whose wages 7,918 persons are dependent for support. The amount paid out in wages each month is $80,034. The statistics show that every $228 invested in cotton manufactures supports one person. The cotton which in its raw state only sells for an average of ten cents is made into yarn, which sells for 22 to 23 cents, and the profit as well as the money for wages, kept at home. The profits of the factories, notwithstanding the hard times, have ranged from 18 to 25 per cent. a year on the capital invested. The largest factory is the Graniteville, with 24,840 spindles and 584 looms, which produce 35,000 yards of cloth per day, and employ 775 operators. The capital of this and the Vanclure factory are combined and is $600,000, now worth $1,000,000. The Crawfordsville factory has only 880 spindles and employs only 12 operatives, but makes 25 per cent. profit on $80,000. A large farm is connected with the factory. The reporter asked the opinion of nearly all the superintendents as to a factory run by steam, and the reply was that with cheap coal it was better than water-power.

In this connection we may add that the Chattanooga factory is far behind its orders. Why not one here?

UNDER the resolution of Senator Voorhees, providing for a Senatorial Committee to inquire into the reasons which impelled a few hundred colored men, women and children to leave North Carolina and go to Indiana, he has given several of his constituents an opportunity to see the sights of the National Capital, who but for this, might have died without seeing them. It was a happy conception of the Hoosier Senator, and has doubtless added largely to his popularity among the faithful. It costs money to go to Washington, and to get there and have a good time at the expense of the Government, is a privilege which many local politicians highly appreciate. What is twenty or thirty thousand dollars to all the people of the United States? It is but a drop in the bucket. But it has given the impecunious friends of Voorhees a great deal of pleasure. They have enjoyed it and he has enjoyed it.

THE Nashville American says of the Weaver bill:

"It does begin to appear that there is no necessity for Congress to flee from Weaver as if he was a ravening wolf. Instead of avoiding a vote on his monstrous proposition, that body ought to take the very earliest opportunity to sit down on it and flatten it out beyond all recognition by its own father. Congress is not making any reputation by dodging every time Weaver tries to bring his insane bill before the House. There is nothing in the state of public opinion in the West or South to warrant the financial alarm of Congress at every mention of the subject of finances. The truth is, the country has settled down into a very conservative, sound and healthful opinion on that subject, and the politicians have not yet recognized it."

The American is right. The Weaver bill is a piece of lunacy. It is cowardly for Congress to dodge it. Let it come up and be promptly voted down. The surviving soldiers and sailors of the late war are too patriotic to ask any such a thing as is contemplated in the Weaver bill, and the country does not demand it. It is a piece of Demagogism, and the sooner Congress "sits down" on it the better.

Republican State Convention.

OFFICE STATE REP. EX. COM.,
NASHVILLE, TENN., Feb. 6, 1880.

A Convention of Republicans of Tennessee will be held at Nashville, in the hall of the House of Representatives, at 12 o'clock, m., on May 5th, next, for the purpose of naming a candidate for Governor of Tennessee, and to select twenty-four delegates to attend the National Republican Convention, which meets at Chicago, Ill., on June 2d. Also, to transact such other business as may come before it.

The ratio of representation in our State Convention will be one delegate from each county in the State, and one additional delegate from each county for every two hundred votes, or fractional part of two hundred over one hundred, cast for the Republican candidates for Electors in 1876.

JOSEPH R. DILLIN,
Chairman State Rep. Ex. Com.

THE IRISH FAMINE.

Some Ghastly Pictures of the Sufferings of the Emerald Isle.

A correspondent of the Freeman's Journal, writing from Rosmuck, on the Galway coast, on the 18th of January, says: "After visiting the townlands upon the Rosmuck promontory, where all that is not stone is quivering bog, I traversed Rosmuck Bay by boat for twelve miles, past Lettermore, Lettercalbagh, and Illaunceragh islands to the group of stony islands and semi peninsulas called Letermullen. Having rummaged the unspeakable nests of shielings upon Dinan Island we penetrated the townland of Carraroe; then, across eight miles of water, through the narrow pass of Belandangam, coasting on either side the wretched townlands of Toween, Camus, and Suanobo, until we found ourselves picking our way in the darkness up the enormous rocks of the little natural cove of Garrofin. I found not one single field in all that stretch of country unincumbered with bowlders, but everywhere patches of starved cultivation scooped out of corners of the rocky plains, or built up in high beds of bog stuff, with deep streams running in the furrows between. I found these starving plots loaded with rack-rents which would be esteemed merciless in Tipperary. But let that pass. I found that stock of any sort have disappeared from hundreds of holdings, even to the very hens, and that whatever little famished mountain cows are left are not only absolutely valueless for sale, but are literally starving, like their owners, for want of food. I found that the seed oats are in many cases gone, and the seed potatoes in all places going. I found that the kelp trade, which was as vital to these people as agriculture, has within two years declined three-fourths in amount and two-thirds in price,—is, in fact, utterly and hopelessly ruined; that their fishing has been of the rudest, and that that, too, has been unfortunate; that the very oyster-dredging which used to give the people employment has been three-fourths destroyed by the cupidity of the rich proprietor of the fishery. I reckon that 600 families at the least will in a month have exhausted their last ounce of food and their last chance of raising any, and that at least 100 families are already in that terrible strait. I saw numbers of men, women, and children who were slowly wasting for want of food—upon two meals a day, upon one meal a day, and that a handful of Indian-meal 'lent' by some less wretched neighbor, and eaten without a drop of milk. I saw a man prowling over dug potato-fields and digging them over again for a couple of forgotten roots. I saw an infant gnawing a turnip and eight little brothers and sisters about her without a rag of underclothing. I saw 'beds' of stones and sea-weed that, if they were in any other country of the world, would raise humanity in revolt. I saw a sick old woman who could not stand up without pulling the roof of the little circular shielding made of sods of bog mould, which she herself had constructed between three huge bowlders, that answered as walls. I saw more than one hovel in the depths of the bogs actually built all over with dripping bog mould, thatched with heathgrass. I saw a family of nine who had nothing in the world to keep life in them except such periwinkles as they could gather on the neighboring strand! And, withal, their peacefulness, their patience, their resignation, even their cheerfulness, is one of the most astounding things in the world. I have had to make a journey close to midnight alone through one of the most necessitous regions of Connemara, and the only persons I encountered in a distance of nineteen miles were two policemen on patrol and a water-bailiff watching the rivers. As for their cheerfulness, Father Keane questioned a widow with five children, who had only two meals more of potatoes, and had traveled to Galway in vain for credit, how were they to live when the potatoes were gone. I will never forget the expression of sweet trustfulness with which she said in Irish, looking into the Priest's face, 'Neither God nor you will let the little orphans starve, Aher Shemus!' A poor old hag, clad in a short and ragged red petticoat, and nothing more, met us on the road near Carraroe, and, putting out her withered, skinny hand, said, always in Irish, 'I expect you'll stretch out some hand to me, Aher Shemus.' The Priest, with that mixture of pathos and good humor which it seems to me alone keeps the people from going mad, put out his right hand frankly and said, 'There it it is; it is as empty as your own.' The poor old thing, as if cheered by the sense of suffering shared, shook her old gray curls with laughing as she said, with a blessing, 'Why, then, more is the pity. That it mightn't be so long.' Amen!"

"A CHANCE ACQUAINTANCE."

How a Washington Business Man Gave President Hayes Politics at "Points."

[Correspondence New York Graphic.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 6.—One of our most popular and enterprising business men was in New Jersey several weeks ago, and got into the train to come home. The parlor car was crowded, but the porter said:

"Take your seat anywhere, sir, for a few minutes. Some of these passengers get out soon, and then I'll give you a seat."

My friend entered the car, and without ceremony seated himself beside a stranger, who was reading a New York morning paper. My friend is a little sensitive about the story I am to tell, and I will not give his name, but for the purpose of identification, I will call him Peters. He is a very sociable man, a stalwart Republican, and pretty well up on politics.

The stranger laid down his paper pretty soon and engaged in conversation with Peters on the topics of the day. Business, speculation, and other matters were discussed, and very naturally the conversation ran into politics, of which subject the stranger did not seem anxious to talk. Peters asked him how far he was going, and the stranger replied that he was on his way to Washington.

"Live there?" asked Peters.

"Only temporarily," was the stranger's reply, and he proceeded to explain that he was in office.

"What part of the country are you from?"

"Ohio."

"Lots of Ohio men around Washington since Hayes came in!" remarked Peters with a smile.

"Yes," replied the stranger, "we Ohio people think we can supply the brains and muskets for the whole country."

"Modest folks, you Ohio men," said Peters again; "got the President, General of the Army, Chief-Justice, Secretary of the Treasury, and about half the offices, and now you want to nominate another Ohio man for President. Do you think John Sherman stands any chance of being nominated?"

"I really don't like to express an opinion on that subject," replied the stranger, promptly. "Secretary Sherman is a friend of mine, and I would like very much to see him President, but I can not estimate his strength."

"They say Hayes is giving him a big lift," suggested Peters.

No reply.

"I understand that Civil Service order about officeholders fooling with political conventions has been temporarily withdrawn, so that John Sherman can get his Southern delegates to Chicago," said Peters.

"A great many things have been said by Secretary Sherman's opponents that are neither true nor reasonable," answered the stranger, somewhat sharply.

"Well, I like to see Hayes stand by his friends," remarked Peters; "but if that Civil Service order was intended to be enforced it ought to be enforced now, while the fight for the nomination is being made. But it was never meant to be enforced. Hayes issued it to satisfy some of the namby-pamby, gilt-edged politicians, who are always for reform when they are out of office. It never made any difference with the political machinery of this country, and it never was intended to."

"The President was sincere in issuing that order," said the stranger, "and I happen to know that he desires its enforcement."

"I hope he isn't lying awake nights fretting about it," remarked Peters.

The stranger changed the topic of conversation, and pretty soon Peters asked if he wouldn't smoke. The proffered cigar was declined, and Peters went to the smoking-room alone. There he met an acquaintance, who asked:

"What gentleman was that you were talking with?"

"Dunno," responded Peters. "I believe he is an Ohio Congressman. I didn't ask his name, but he said he was in office."

"What were you talking about?"

"Politics, mostly. He seems to be an Administration man. Says he wants John Sherman nominated, and seemed a little touchy when I said that Hayes' Civil Service Reform business was a humbug. He said he knew Hayes was sincere, and all that."

"Don't you know who he is?"

"No; I never saw him before."

"Never saw the President of the United States?"

"Holy Moses! Is that Hayes?"

"Yes."

"You don't tell me! I thought I knew the man, but it didn't occur to me that he was Hayes."

"What did you say to him?"

"Nothing but what I'll back up, and nothing but what is true; but maybe I would not have expressed my views so clearly if I had known who I was talking with. Look here, porter, can't you get me a seat in the other car?"
