Dr. Barth's African Travels extend over a tract of country of twenty-four degrees from north to south, and twenty degrees from east to west, in the broadest part of the Continent of Africa, and necessarily comprise subjects of great and varied interest, as the regions traversed by him are in great part untrodden ground, and have never been visited by any white man who has returned to "tell the tale." The narrative includes a full account of the mysterious City of Timbuktu (derived from seven months' residence); the course of the River Niger, &c., connecting the Travels of Denham, Clapperton, and the Landers, with those of Major Laing and Mungo Park, and throwing a flood of light on the hitherto "Terra Incognita" of Central Africa.
