BIG EATERS GET KIDNEY TROUBLE

TAKE SALTS AT FIRST SIGN OF BLADDER IRRITATION OR BACKACHE.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the illminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like the urine is cloudy, full of sediment or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night, if you suffer with sick headache or bouts of bad; your back hurts or lazy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

Pat's Whereabouts.

An English mill manager one day missing one of his workmen who chanced to be an Irishman, searched his yard, but in vain. After some time Pat returned, and, being accused of his absence by the manager, who said he had searched the four corners of the yard for him, Pat replied: "Ah, sir, sure I was in the center I was."

Here's a Thought.

It is much safer to shout with the crowd than against it. That is why the crowd makes such a noise.—Printers' Ink.

CONFEDERACY DAY AT UNIVERSITY FAVORED

Will Be Made Annual Event, Offering Programs Commemorating Deeds of Southern Heroes.

AUSTIN, Texas, March 20.—President A. Garland Adair announces that a plan is on foot for setting apart a day to be known as Confederacy Day in the University. No holiday will be given for that purpose of such a celebration, but an hour will be devoted to exercises, to be attended by all of the students and participated in by them.

The Daughters of the Confederacy of Austin will be seen in regard to the plans and requested to cooperate in making the day so successful that it will continue to be observed from year to year.

The purpose of the setting apart such a day will be two-fold. First an opportunity will be given whereby the young men and women of the University will be given the opportunity of perpetuating Southern traditions and paying tribute to Southern heroes. The argument in favor of this is that the traditions are worthy of being cherished, and, if the South does not respect her heroes no other section will do so for her. Secondly, an opportunity will be thereby given for binding all sections closer together in the strong bond of true Nationality. No bitterness or strife will be engendered, but the spirit of unity and patriotism will dominate the gathering and characterize the remarks of those requested to participate as speakers of the day.

The Commander-in-Chief of the Southern Confederacy, the last surviving brigadier general of the conflict, will be invited to attend the meeting and address the gathering. Colonel Cousins of the faculty has already accepted an invitation to speak upon that occasion. In addition an alumnus will be extended an invitation to speak briefly at that time, and two students also, one from the North and one from the South. This will insure a very interesting program of an hour's length, and the enthusiasm naturally aroused by the date should open still more coffers to the success of the undertaking.

The date is as yet indefinite, but in all probability Jefferson Davis birthday will be so designated, or some other fitting day in the spring.

MEXICAN EDITOR'S VIEW OF AMERICAN WARSHIPS

Miguel Orduna Writes Graphic Description of Dreadnaughts in Harbor at Vera Cruz.

MEXICO CITY, March 20.—Continuing to El Pais his impressionistic sketches of conditions in Vera Cruz, Miguel Orduna, editor of that paper who has been stalled in the port for some time, writes as follows:

"We are before in the bay of Vera Cruz. The sea, scarcely ruffled by the last breath of the norther which lasted two days, softly laps the seawalls extending to the north and to the south like two coarse white arms of some gigantic athlete trying to press against him the immensity of the changing water. Along the quay two large merchant vessels raise their chimneys and masts.

"Farther away, in the center, we see several ships, the mouths of the cannon which we see sticking out of the turrets indicate that they are warships. To the south is the Carlos V., a Spanish cruiser; to the north the American cruiser Des Moines, and between the two, the Chester protected cruiser and design ship of Admiral Fletcher.

"The cruiser Des Moines, splotched with big red spots, has a sad record for intervention, as she has been in Cuba, Panama and also Nicaragua, where she helped to pull down the legally constituted government of General Santos Zelaya.

"The stars and stripes wave victoriously in the wind and above the decks the steel domes of the turrets appear to be crouching.

"The three gray boats surge from the sea, looking like mediaeval horses caparisoned with heavy harness. Monstrous they disdain our smallness and continue, immovable and somber, having something eternal and definite in their powerful expression; strongly held by their anchors, while the nutshell that carries us bravely breasts the sea, rising on the crest of one wave, to be lowered in the depression of the next.

"We are so near the monsters that we can clearly distinguish the marines aboard them: blonde, white, vigorous, more than vigorous, athletic; they have traits of Apollo, and they look at us with their blue eyes in which we read the racial contempt with which they have always scorned us. For them we have been and continue to be 'greasers.'

"Afterwards we pass in front of the Carlos V., on whose deck we see nice-looking boys promenading, and we recollect the disaster of Cavite and Santiago de Cuba. We think bitterly that the same mission has reunited today conquerors and conquered, and the only consolation we have is the certainty that mother Spain weeps with us in our misfortunes, as we kept with her in hers."

Stubborn, Annoying Coughs Cured

"My husband had a cough for fifteen years and my son for eight years. Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured them, for which I am most thankful," writes Mrs. David Moor, of Sazinaw, Ala. DOWN THE AMUR RIVER

A TRIP down the Amur river seemed hazardous enough when contemplated from the security of one's study. Stories of river pirates and banditti were rife. Friends recommended reliable firearms and eternal vigilance in case of my passport: the one as a protection against robbery and the other to prevent ending my days in a Siberian convict mine, writes C. A. Hibbard in the Chicago Daily News.

In reality the trip was so safe as to make all warnings ridiculous. Everywhere comfort was the first consideration. French cuisines, steam heated staterooms on palatial river boats, excellent hotels and obsequious servants are not exactly what one expects from a bandit ridden country, had the recommendations been for heavy clothing and a winter overcoat they would have been much more to the point. Northern Siberia is cold even in August; a temperature of 50 degrees at noon is not uncommon.

Makes Its Own Commerce.

The Amur is the Mississippi of Siberia. It makes its own commerce, since the fertile plain through which it runs supplies the basis of the trade which it transports. For a distance of perhaps 2,000 miles the river is navigable and is plied almost daily by government and private steamers of luxurious passenger accommodation and with a great carrying trade.

Entering Siberia at Vladivostok, my first objective point was Khabarovsk on the Amur. For some hours the train traversed the famous trans-Siberian route and then at Nikolsk shot off to the north, independently I say "shot off" inadvertently—there was nothing so hasty as that about it. Whether it was a professed "milk train" or not, I don't know, but it bore all possible resemblance to an Arkansas express. After the seventh stop, made at the seventh log cabin en route, one begins to realize that Siberia is so sparsely populated.

The first half-hour unfolds all the wonders of the country. From the car window it is an unchanging panorama of village, forest and flat meadow land, with now and then an isolated log cabin surrounded by a field of waving grain. When one's nearest neighbor is miles away, fences are superfluous, and fences there are none. But if the scene is wearying to the eye, the impression of latent fertility is stupendous. With time and population everything seems possible.

Khabarovsk is the leading city of the Amur district. In commemoration of the tercentenary of the reign of the imperial house of Romanoff an exhibition of Amur products is in progress there. It is about such an exhibition as one would expect after three centuries of Romanoff rule; two hours suffices for the whole exposition. Thousands, almost millions, of rubles have been spent in buildings, grounds and exhibits, and yet, the afternoon I was there there were not thirty visitors on all the grounds.

While it may be the way of all exhibitions to prove financial failures, this is still a glaring example of that inefficiency which one finds everywhere here. The one impression the visitor carries away from the place is the magnitude of the possibilities of the soil which it represented. The country is still virgin, cold and all but implacable, but for the strong, virile people who have the patience to woo her she has smiles and gracious reward beyond measure. For him who has the stamina to withstand cold, ice and solitude this imperial lady of the snows spreads a cloth of gold and empties her horn of plenty.

More wonderful than the exhibition are the dairy products one meets with in the restaurants. Here milk is cream and cream of nectar for the gods; butter is a confection and the eggs more to be coveted than those of the fabled goose.

Solitude of the Amur.

The Amur is not unlike all great rivers. It winds and twists and doubles upon itself in a manner that is discouragingly common, while the scenery is mostly flat and uninteresting. But in solitude, isolation and the primeval glory of the forests the river trip surpasses even the railroad journey. At night as the boat, electric lighted, steam propelled and spouting great clouds of sparks from her funnel, makes her way down stream, it is a piece of twentieth century intruded on a pristine background. One imagines that he hears the flutter of countless startled wings as the raucous whistle penetrates and re-echoes through the forests, and the search light playing on the banks to find a landing place transforms the slender white trunks of the birch trees into so many ghosts.

The arrival of the boat is heralded to the villages along our route by the tolling of the church bell. The whole community comes down to the river side. There are the men in the ubiquitous high boots and gayly embroidered shirts, barefooted women in cheap print wrappers of gaudy reds and blues and children in garments of uncertain origin and as many colors as Joseph's coat. Each and every one is loaded down with bottles of delicious Siberian milk which they dispose of to the passengers at prices ridiculously cheap. Somewhat after the citizens, and with a superior dignity, comes an old sow or two, with a platoon of anxious offspring. Aborigines which bear a wonderful physical resemblance to our own Indians and which, one learns, are called gilyaks, in strange, flat bottomed, native craft crowd about the steamer with berries for sale.

It is the same thing the next day and next. But with the completion of the journey one finds that the wild, silent solitude has insinuated itself into one's very soul. The traveler leaves the steamer at the city of Nikolayevsk with a sense of regret. It is as though one had come out from the cool, shaded walks of a monastery into a busy, noisy thoroughfare. As Stevenson has said of another river, it has "quieted a man down like saying his prayers."

Devil and Deep Sea.

Colonel Munros in his "Expedition With Mackey's Regiment" (to the Low Countries), printed in London in 1637, says that his command charged upon the Austrians and were some distance ahead of the Swedish army. The Swedish gunners did not elevate their pieces enough, and their shot began to drop among Mackey's men. "so that we were between the devil and the deep sea."

The Professor's Wife (to the Professor, who has just come in from a walk)—"What have you done with your umbrella and Fido?" The Professor (trying to remember)—"Wha—h'm—wait a minute—oh, yes, precisely. You see, my hat blew off, and I didn't want to have the poor little beast run with me after it, so I staid the umbrella in the ground somewhere and tied Fido to it. I suppose they are still there."

No Need to Watch Horseradish.

The cultivation of horseradish is a thriving industry, a writer in the Country Gentleman says, and he describes a three-acre farm devoted to this industry which keeps two men busy, one of them making good money out of his miniature farm. One advantage of this crop is thus described: "The horseradish farmer can well lie back and rest in easy security, for he has a crop that only insects with suicidal motives attack."

The Sweetest Words.

"Are there any sweeter words in the English language," musingly inquired Professor Swiggs, "than 'I love you?'" "Well," grimly remarked the pessimistic hearer, "I understand that some authorities regard 'There's that money I owe you,' as about the epitome of satisfactory sentences."

His Fad.

"No," said Abner Meddergrass, director of school district 13, Hooppoole township, "no, I don't imagine as you'll do nohow for our school teacher. I wants one as is well up in grammar. 'Tain't a fad of mine. You don't seem to know nothin' about that important study. Good mornin'."
