Rare Art Works Held For Debt.

A collection of paintings and statuary, asserted to include a statue of Venus, by Praxiteles, and a portrait of the Duchess of Kent by Gainesborough, and valued at $600,000, is in a storage warehouse in New York, and the warehouse people won't give it up for fear of trouble from the owners, who are traveling somewhere. This priceless collection was bid in at sheriff's auction for $100, last August, by a bank which had a $3,000 judgment against the absent owner.

Wholesale Machine Smashing.

About $5,000 worth of confiscated slot machines were smashed into junk and firewood at police headquarters in New York the other day. There were nearly 300 machines of all sorts, from those which shuffled up poker hands when a nickel is dropped into them to harmless looking boxes labeled "Drop a penny in the slot and hear the music play." They had been gathered in at various raids, and, according to law, had to be destroyed so completely that they never could be used again.
