DEALERS IN WOVEN ELASTIC VULCANIZED RUBBER GOODS
Are notified not to purchase of Horace H. Day any such goods, unless the same are stamped with the license mark of WILLIAM JUDSON, who is the sole owner of the right to make and sell the same. Our suit against Day to enjoin him from selling such goods, the trial of which was postponed on Day's application from the 27th day of September, is set down for hearing in the U. S. Circuit Court in this city for the 10th inst., when we shall be ready for trial, and when the question will be settled whether the Woven goods right is owned by Horace H. Day, or by the undersigned, licensee of the patentee.
One reason for giving this notice at this time, is, that we have been informed that Horace H. Day and his counsel have, since the adjournment of the hearing which he procured, stated to the Courts where Day has suits pending against vendors of Woven Elastic Goods, and to some of the merchants themselves, that we had withdrawn this suit, and that there would be no trial of the case between us and him.

THE WIFE'S SECRET.
Pronounced the FINEST PLAY EVER PRESENTED
FINEST PLAY EVER PRESENTED
To a New-York Audience.
FROM THE NEW-YORK HERALD.
FROM THE NEW-YORK HERALD.
"Miss Laura Keene secured the 'Wife Secret' for her theater, where it was played last evening. The scene is laid in England, in the time of the Protectorate. Lady Amyott (Miss Laura Keene) is the wife of a Colonel (Mr. Jordan) in Cromwell's army. Her brother, Lord Arden, (Mr. Daly,) is a violent Monarchist, and in the absence of Col. Amyott, claims shelter in his house, at the same time making Lady Amyott swear to keep the fact of his being under her roof a secret from every one. The suspicions of Col. Amyott are aroused by a villainous steward, Sneed, (Mr. Burnett,) and in a powerful scene the husband receives almost positive proofs of the guilt of his wife, who is seen through a window embracing the cavalier. The lady remains faithful to her oath, and is about to be put away by her husband, when Lord Arden escapes, is fired upon by Amyott's order, and falls as if dead. In the agony of the moment the wife declares the fugitive is her brother, but the husband refuses to believe her, and chases on the pursuers. Lord Arden is brought back unhurt, and the curtain descends upon mutual explanations and a tableau of happiness. The play is admirably constructed, the characters forcible and well imagined, and the language terse, easy, elegant and forcible, without being overstrained. Miss Keene played Lady Amyott with fine effect. In the last act her mingled supplications for the life of her brother, her anxiety for his safety, and her shriek of horror when her husband announces the supposed death of the fugitive, were admirably worked up. Miss Keene had a fine artistic opportunity, and made the most of it. Mr. Jordan played Col. Amyott in a manly and dignified way, and in the last act shared the triumphs of the night with Miss Keene. Mr. Burnett was good, though a little given to mannerism, in the part of the steward, and two minor characters, were cleverly acted by Misses Wells and McCarthy. The piece was mounted well, acted carefully throughout, and made an entire success. A play so good as this is a dramatic point of view, and so entirely unexceptionable in every way, is a novelty in these latter days, and ought to have a great run."
SATURDAY EVENING, Nov. 12, 1859
And every night till further notice, will be presented the beautiful five-act Play, entitled THE WIFE'S SECRET.

It will be necessary to introduce respectively the nearest relatives on both sides before an engagement can be made.
