GAS ON THE STOMACH

Flatulence, or gas in the digestive tract, is an annoying accompaniment of intestinal indigestion and constipation. As a rule it indicates that food is being retained in the stomach and intestines longer than nature intended.

When colicky pains accompany the presence of gas the need of a gentle laxative to clear away the offending food residue is imperative. If the condition of constipation is not quickly corrected a coated tongue, eruptions on the skin, headaches and backaches soon show that the poisons have found their way into the circulation.

The use of the gentle laxative pills, Pinklets, will not only banish these unpleasant symptoms quickly but, if used regularly for a reasonable time, will really correct chronic constipation.

Pinklets are not like harsh purgatives that leave the bowels dry and in the end worse than before. Pinklets gently assist nature, never gripe and are so small and easy to take that they are known as the dainty laxative.

Your own druggist can supply you with Pinklets or they will be sent by mail, postpaid, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y., at 25c per bottle. Send for the book "The Dainty Laxative" telling how to treat constipation.

TO SAVE EYES

Is the Object of This Free Prescription—Try It if Your Eyes Give You Trouble

Thousands of people suffer from eye troubles because they do not know what to do. They know some good home remedy for every other minor ailment, but none for their eye troubles. They neglect their eyes, because the trouble is not sufficient to drive them to an eye specialist, who would, anyway, charge them a heavy fee. As a last resort they go to an optician or to the five and ten-cent store, and oftentimes get glasses that they do not need, or which, after being used two or three months, do their eyes more injury than good. Here is a simple prescription that everyone should use:

5 grains Optona (1 tablet).
2 ounces Water.

Use three or four times a day to bathe the eyes. This prescription and the simple Optona system keeps the eyes clean, sharpens the vision and quickly overcomes inflammation and irritation; weak, watery, overworked, tired eyes and other similar troubles are greatly benefited and oftentimes cured by its use. Many reports show that wearers of glasses have discarded them after a few weeks' use. It is good for the eyes and contains no ingredient which would injure the most sensitive eyes of an infant or the aged. Any druggist can fill this prescription promptly. Try it and know for once what real eye comfort it.

Rev. Edgar Crossland, the eloquent and forceful preacher, who spoke at the Presbyterian church Sunday is a man of letters, also of extensive travel. He acquired the degree of B. A. from Bowdoin college, Brunswick, Me., and since then has taken a degree from Harvard university and one from Andover Theological seminary. He has traveled through Africa, Egypt, Palestine, Asia Minor, Turkey and throughout Europe, also a greater part of the United States and Canada. He witnessed the Passion Play at Oberammergau in 1910. Mr. Crossland graduated from Bowdoin college with honors and received the Goodwin commencement prize for oratory and English. While doing college work at Bowdoin, he took charge of the Congregational church at Mechanic Falls, Me., and raised over $1,000 to pay a debt, which had been on the church for a period of twelve years. Mr. Crossland has been pastor of the Congregational church at South Acton, Mass., for the past four years, and during his ministry there have been many accessions to the church. He has raised money for a new pipe organ and has had it installed. He came to Barre at the request of Rev. McNeill of Graniteville and will remain here over Sunday, Sept. 13. He will speak at the Presbyterian church both morning and evening next Sunday.

Consumption in Families of Workmen.

In a recent discussion in England on public health research, Matthew Hay, M. D., of the University of Aberdeen, brought to notice some interesting facts with reference to families of working men and consumption. The figures are those of Aberdeen for the years from 1900 to 1909 and are a comparison of the mortality among the families of workmen in and out of the so-called dangerous occupations. There were selected four occupations rated as dangerous and four others with low mortality from phthisis. The mortality for the first-named group was 3.9 per thousand workmen and for the last-named, 1.5 per thousand workmen. This is as one would expect, the latter figure being somewhat better than the Boston mortality from the same cause in the whole population. But the story with wives and children is very different, more particularly with reference to unmarried children. The wives, whether mated to workmen in or out of the dangerous trades, died at the same rate in the two classes, 1.8 per thousand being the figure. This is a little higher than for the men themselves in the ordinary employments. But for the children the mortality rose to 4 per thousand and 4.2, the latter, the children of the workmen in the innocent trades. The incidence of the disease among the fathers seems to have no relationship to that in the homes.

The same fact has been noted in other places, among the tin mines of Cornwall, the stone workers of Derbyshire and the flint-knappers of Norfolk. What it means is an interesting question which needs still much investigation.—Boston Transcript.

Planting in the Fall.

Most kinds of deciduous trees and shrubbery can be planted with success in the fall. There are advantages, too, in planting them at that time. The heat in the soil, stored up from the long season of warm weather, is retained in a degree up until early winter. This warm soil encourages root-growth in the newly planted tree, and enables it to become established and ready to start growing with the first warm days of spring. This means that the planter will get better results than if the planting had been deferred until the next season.

Another advantage is because the spring season is so short, and there is usually so much to be done that it is almost impossible to do all. The fall season, extending over a longer period, enables one to accomplish this work in a much more satisfactory manner.—Suburban Life, the Countryside Magazine for September.

SMOKE SALE

The insurance adjusters having completed the work on the insurance of our immense stock of goods, we are now prepared to throw open our doors and put at your advantage the most rare opportunity to buy goods the public of Barre has had for some time. The majority of these goods were all new this summer, and were not damaged to any extent. As our store escaped the fire and water, our only damage was by smoke, and for this reason you are profiting by our loss. Think of buying the goods marked down at the prices that are set on them. Never before in the history of bargaindom have you had the chance that we are offering you now. We must dispose of them at this sale, as we need the room for our incoming stock of fall and winter goods that are on the way, so get in line and count yourself as one of the lucky ones that have had the unusual treat of patronizing the greatest smoke sale Barre has ever known. We invite your inspection on any piece of goods in the store before you purchase, as we believe in giving a square and honest deal to everyone. We expect to continue our business in the future along the same lines as we have in the past.
