and over 4,000 prisoners." The fighting was not over, as the enemy still confronted Bragg. We hope that, as such decided success has attended our arms at the commencement, no reverse may be experienced, though it is impossible at present writing to say what will be the final result, yet all look forward most anxiously to hear the full and full shout of victory.

Should Bragg win a decided victory, driving Rosecrans back upon Nashville, and pressing forward upon him, Tennessee will be reclaimed, and all the gloom that lately overspread the cause, be dispelled. The most important results hang upon the impending battle; the enemy are no where else able to take the field. Charleston and Chattanooga are the only points where the enemy present the least appearance of fight. Defeated at Chattanooga, and driven back upon Nashville, the Vallandigham men in Ohio would carry the election next month with little difficulty; the peace men in the United States would once more assert their manhood, and speak out as they did before the late disasters had chilled their utterances.

But it is not among the peace men of the United States that a victory at Chattanooga would most tell upon the cause—here at home its effects will be greatest. It will reanimate our people—the army needs but little reanimation; but the people have not experienced the same hardships that the army has, and they are more easily made despondent. The army never despairs of the Republic, because it feels itself able to bear its fortunes and misfortunes also; but some of the people are so busy discussing the probability of a financial bankruptcy that defeats overcome them. A victory is wanted by the currency—we hope Gen. Bragg will gain a decided victory.

From The Richmond Sentinel, Sept. 22.

ADDRESS OF THE WESTERN GOVERNORS.

We have seldom read a document with as much delight as the address, which we publish to-day, of the Governors of the States of Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Texas, to their people. The spirit which it breathes is devoted and heroic, indeed truly noble. Cut off as they are from the States of the East, they manfully accept the gage of separate battle for a common cause. Their devotion to the Confederacy is unshaken, their spirits are sunny and bright, and their confidence in our final success unabated and unwavering. It is, indeed, cheering to have such brave and patriotic sentiments from our brethren of the trans-Mississippi. Heartily must the people of the East respond to them; and, constrained as we are to separate efforts, we must enter upon a generous rivalry which shall best perform our respective works, and do most to hasten the time when our intercourse shall be reestablished, and the shouts of victory and independence come up from both sides of our great river.

Most fervently do we wish our brave brethren of the West God-speed in battling for their country and their homes. We trust that they are right in supposing that our common work will not suffer by the division of it; they to their part, we to ours. They have a glorious country for defense; rich in resources, vast in extent, and peopled by a brave population. They have skillful and tested generals; and the latter before us proves they have excellent governors. What is to hinder them, therefore, from defending themselves with glorious success? Let us do our work with zeal, in the full confidence that the heroes of San Jacinto and Lexington, and Springfield and Elkhorn, will do theirs.

To the People of Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas and Missouri, and the Allied Indian Nations.

At the invitation of the Lieutenant-General commanding the Trans-Mississippi Department we assembled at this place, with several of your Judges, Confederate Senators and other distinguished citizens, to confer with him on the measures to be taken for the defense of our common cause. These measures we do not particularize, as they had best be disclosed by the execution of them, and by the benefits they must produce. Coming to a thorough understanding with him, the members of the Conference unanimously sustain the vigorous and decided policy he proposes to pursue.

We will not attempt to disguise the change in our position by the fall of our strongpoint on the Mississippi River. Interrupting communication between the two sections of the Confederacy, it throws each mainly on its own resources. But the apprehensions of evil from this interruption have been greatly exaggerated. The warning given by the fall of New-Orleans has not been unheeded, and the interval since that event has been used to develop the great resources of this Department. We now are self-dependent, but also self-sustaining.

With our own manufactories of cannon, arms, powder and other munitions of war, with mines opened and factories established, with cotton as a basis for financial measures, and with abundance of food, we are able to conduct a vigorous defense, and seize occasions for offensive operations against the enemy. The immense extent of our territory, the uncertainty of navigating our rivers, the unwholesomeness of the regions through which our interior is approached, the difficulties of transportation on our roads, present immense obstacles to the advance of large armies of the enemy, with their cumbrous trains of luxurious supplies; small bodies will ignominiously fall in the attempt at our subjugation. To crush even his largest armies, we rely on the energy and skill of our military commanders, the zeal and activity of our civil authorities, the discipline and courage of our armies, and the vigorous, self-sacrificing patriotism of our whole people. There is everything to incite us to renewed efforts, nothing to justify despondency.

We are fortunate in the military chief of this Department. In the prime of life, of large experience, active, intelligent, and with the prestige of uniform success in his undertakings, he is guided by a profound respect for law and the constitutional rights of the citizens. Reposing full trust in him, we cordially extend him to your entire confidence and support. In view of the existing state of our affairs, he has been clothed with more than usual powers by the President, to be exercised within the bounds of the Constitution and the law. These act and legal powers he may have to exert promptly and boldly, to a far fullest extent, for the common good; in so doing he will receive the zealous support of every patriot. The entire military force and resources in this Department should be liberally used for our protection when necessary. Some measures may inconvenience particular individuals, but we rely on their patriotism and good sense to produce a cheerful endurance of the hardships to be expected in a war for our very existence as a nation.

To organize and combine without delay the individual efforts of our citizens to assist in our cause, we have formed, unofficially, a Committee of Public Safety, to be composed of the Executives, for the time being, of the States in this Department, and have selected the Governor of Missouri as president thereof. By combination of extraordinary zeal and voluntary associations in every town and county, we hope to unite all our public resources in a vigorous support of the Confederate and state authorities in defence of our families and homes. Let every man rally to the call and promptly fly to the organization which will fill the Southern heart to the full enthusiasm throughout the whole Department. Let a patriotic press and clergy stimulate to action. Under the searching eye of a whole people, unless in extraordinary exigencies, the plots of secret foes will wither in the bud. By the wholesome influence of the well-pleased but imposing eye of an organized and operating western public opinion, the despondent will be inspired with fresh hope, the steadfast be nerved to better energy, the injurious extortioner learn blushingly the selfish manhood abandon his treachery, and the vile traitor be cowed into the shadows of decency.

We address you in the true language of firm confidence in the final triumph of our cause, concealing nothing of our perils, exaggerating nothing of our hopes. Our powerful and haughty foes propose not only to coerce us into submission, but to despoil us of our whole property, and subject us to every species of ignominy. Base is he who would not continue to contend for our rights even when all shall be lost but honor. The capitalist must be liberal of his means, the speculator forego his gains, the struggler hasten to his regiment, every able-bodied man lend himself in readiness for military service; our women, the glory of our race, tend the loom and even follow the plow; our boys guard the homes their fathers are defending on the frontier, and western skill and valor will prepare a San Jacinto defeat for every invading army that pollutes the soil of this department. Unsurpassed in courage, intelligence and energy, you have only to arise in your might and the enemy will be speedily driven back. Be true to yourselves, your past history, to your hopes of the future, and a baffled foe will gladly seek the peace which we war to obtain.

The enemy may dismiss all hopes that the Western section of the Confederacy will seek any destiny separate from that of our sisters East of the Mississippi. Attached to the Confederacy by community of race, institutions and interests, baptized in the blood we and they have poured out together, we desire no new political connection. Let our Eastern Confederates do their duty, these States and our Indian allies will do theirs, and when our joint efforts shall have secured our common safety, the remembrance of the danger from a temporary cessation of the intercourse will only strengthen the ties which bind us together. In the darkest hours of our history, the protection extended to us by Almighty God, has been so manifest as even to be acknowledged by candid foes. Their victories have been to them as fruit turning to ashes on their lips; our defeats have been chastenings to improve us, and arouse our energies. On His help and our own right arms we steadfastly rely; counting on aid neither from the policy of neutral nations, nor from the distractions in the midst of our enemies. We look confidently forward to the day when thirteen Confederate States will in peace and safety occupy their rightful position among the Great Powers of the earth.

THE CONFIDENCE FELT IN BILL.

There is one man in the Army of Tennessee in whom we, in common with the soldiers of the army, have an abiding faith. It is Bill of the Virginia Army. There is something of the "Stonewall" and "Old Hickory" Jackson about him that inspires confidence. In the council of war, or on the field, his word will be alone for "war to the knife and the knife to the hilt." Although a finished, polished, and accomplished soldier, his strictness, for that of the lamented Jackson's, comprises "quick licks and plenty of them." As one of his soldiers remarked to us the other day, "he's a fighter from the word go, and don't know when he's whipped any more than Bedford Forrest." [Rebel.
