THURSDAY MORNING, MARCH 26, 1868.

Impeachment—What Certain Senators Say—President Johnson Alone Responsible for His Difficulties—The Scare at the War Department—Movements of Troops.

The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Gazette says:

There are many prominent and well-informed gentlemen here who will tell you that the president's conviction is a foregone conclusion, believing as they do that the Senate is but a partizan body to record the judgment of the House of Representatives. Nevertheless the impression is growing stronger every day, that a sufficient number of conscientious senators will be found in due time to save the country from disgrace. The pressure by party upon radical senators has undoubtedly been very great, and may possibly increase, yet several of them feeling sore under it have returned to assert their determination to throw off the party yoke in this trial and do full justice to the president according to the law and the facts, as these may be presented. Only last evening a prominent radical senator from the West, and one too who has been classified with those who are certain to vote for conviction, in alluding to this party pressure, he said he did not know what others might do, but as for himself, he should look only to the law and the facts, and in all cases of doubt lean to the side of the respondent. Such, he said, had been his course through life, and he should on the present trial address himself only to his own conscience and the Constitution. The result of this and similar declarations from other senators has inspired a confident belief in the minds of a large majority of outsiders here that impeachment will be a failure. In the meantime, however, even the friends of the president regard him as alone responsible for the difficulties in which he has become involved, as his leading peculiarity has been never to consult with anyone as to the policy or propriety of his official action. He has allowed the entire patronage of the federal government to remain steadily in the hands of his political enemies against the solemn protest of those who were endeavoring to sustain his administration; he has refused to remove personal enemies and political spies from his official household until so shackled by congressional enactments that he is unable to regulate and control the personnel of his own cabinet; he has allowed a co-ordinate branch of the government to usurp the prerogatives until it has left him little more than a change of linen. During all this time Mr. Johnson has kept his own counsel and withheld his confidence from his friends. It is understood that his purpose to remove Stanton and appoint General Lorenzo Thomas secretary of war ad interim, was never disclosed even to his cabinet, nor had any Democratic member of Congress received the slightest intimation of the movement in advance of its actual occurrence. Hence the contest has been Andrew Johnson single handed against the whole Jacobin force, and this contest has culminated in an attempt to seize the executive reigns of the government by a formal impeachment of the president.

The present condition of things, however, cannot last long, and the nation must throw off, in some form, the disease which has fastened itself upon the body politic. It is too deadly to become chronic, and if not soon remedied, only one alternative is presented. Every material interest of the country is suffering, and public confidence is fast giving way. If the people could be aroused from their fearful lethargy and would take the remedy into their own hands, our government might be speedily restored to a healthy condition. Whether they will do so or not, the spring and the autumn elections must determine. If the autumn elections pass by, and no relief from our present national embarrassments be afforded, then indeed may we anticipate from the pen of history that fearful sentence: Fuit Ilium.

There has been an attempt to discredit the "scare at the war office," but there is substantial foundation for all the reports put afloat in this particular regard. Many of the military movements have been ordered and executed in the greatest secrecy, but there is, nevertheless, one quite as extraordinary as any of its brood which is familiar to the eye of every resident of Washington. A military patrol now occupies our streets night and day, reminding the people of the days of the rebellion, when the approach of a heavy tread of a patrol at the hour of midnight started into being unpleasant apprehensions of the Old Capitol and Carroll prisons. There may be good reasons known to the military authorities for this unusual display of bayonets in our midst, but if so, those reasons are unknown to our metropolitan population. Mr. Stanton may not be "scared," but his loud whistling is suspicious.

[From Dispatches of the 21st and 23d.]

HANCOCK AND THE PRESIDENT.

There is much speculation about an interview to-day between the president and Gen. Hancock. The president desires him to take command of this department, but nothing was definitely decided in this interview. Subsequently Gen. Hancock visited General Grant, and received a cordial reception.

RADICAL SENTIMENT ON IMPEACHMENT.

Leading radicals assert that the sentiment of their party, as revealed by letters from all sections, demands the conviction of the president. Several senators, hitherto disposed to conservative action, have grown restive and anxious at these demonstrations, and are decidedly shaky.

DESIGNS OF THE PRESIDENT.

The radicals assert Johnson has ulterior designs in calling Hancock here, but that no attempt a intimidation of force can save him.

SEWARD AND THE PRESIDENT.

Seward, on his return to-day, had a private interview with the president, and made certain suggestions about his defense, which were afterward submitted to his counsel.

BEN BUTLER

Is named for the treasury department, if Wade goes into the Presidential chair. The confidence of his friends is based on his successful financial operations in New Orleans.

SCHOFIELD.

The Richmond radicals have made formal charges against General Schofield. Grant has them under consideration.

PENDLETON ON THE PACIFIC.

An ex-governor of Oregon, who has just arrived here, in speaking of Pendleton's indorsement in their convention, says he will carry the State by a large majority.

SEWARD.

Secretary Seward returned to Washington on Saturday and immediately called on the president, with whom he had a long consultation. There seems to be a general belief in official circles that Mr. Seward is about to retire from the cabinet, but the president says he has received no intimation of it.

CASSIUS M. CLAY

writes to a friend in this city that his resignation takes effect on the 1st of April, and that he will immediately return to this country to enter the canvass for General Grant, with the understanding that he will be returned to Russia if Grant is elected.

PREPARED FOR EMERGENCIES.

Col. Brown, the sergeant-at-arms of the Senate, has made ample arrangements for the preservation of order. In addition to the reserve police force, which can be summoned by telegraph, there will be an aid-de-camp of Gen. Emory, who commands the military district, at the capitol, with orders signed in blank, with which he can summon two regiments of infantry at five minutes' notice. Each company of these regiments has recently been increased to ninety-seven enlisted men, and the cavalry stationed here has been recruited to 112 men to a company. Few believe the stories afloat about an armed resistance to the law, but Gen. Grant has had the garrison made ready for any emergency.

ROBERT C. BUCHANAN, Brevet Major General U. S. Army.

The Sandwich Islanders appear to be greatly enamored of the United States. It is recorded that at a recent election there some of the people marched to the polls with the American flag at their head and the Hawaiian flag at the rear of the procession.

The horse eating amateurs of Paris seem resolved to continue the contest with the beef-eating interest. On Mardi-Gras, in addition to the show of stalled oxen, two fat horses, decked out with ribbons, and led by four grooms in fantastic costumes, were paraded through some of the streets, accompanied by a cortège of mounted attendants. This rival display was organized by two horse-flesh butchers of La Vilette.

In the printing establishment of the Abbé Migne, which was recently burned in Paris, was one work that occupied 391 thick quarto volumes. All but the last volume had been printed, and it was destroyed together with the manuscript, a cord or more. There were two other works, one of 171 and the other of 102 quarto volumes, both completed within two volumes of the conclusion, that shared the same fate. The number of volumes burned is estimated at several hundred thousand. The Abbé Migne carried on not only printing and publishing, but built organs, employed painters, sculptors and other artists. Nearly 800 workmen were employed in this one building at twelve different trades.

Dispatches from Constantinople report that the grand vizier complains of aid indirectly furnished by the Russian transports to the small bands of the Cretan insurgents in the mountains, and declares this alone prevents the restoration of complete tranquility in Candia.

An exploring expedition lately sent by the Peruvian government to examine the country along the banks of the Maranon, one of the main tributaries of the Amazon, discovered immense deposits of gold. The Indians of that region are reported to be fierce and utterly savage, but an invading horde of gold hunters, by way of the river, now free to navigation, will doubtless soon teach the aborigines the expediency of peaceful conduct.

General Lersundi ordered the bishop of Havana to be conveyed to Porto Rico by a war vessel.

The governor of St. Thomas has requested the Porto Rican authorities to send cattle and provisions to relieve the distress of the inhabitants. A thousand individuals were proposing to emigrate to Porto Rico.

The French troops in Rome have been reduced to a single brigade.

The frost has been unusually severe at St. Petersburg this winter. A great many hack drivers were frozen on their boxes, gas everywhere was frozen, dogs yelped as if the pavement burned their feet, horses ran away in terror at the intensity of the cold, the grand dukes distributed hot tea in front of the palaces, furnaces were kept burning in some streets, the city seemed deserted, nobody who could help it ventured out of doors, and eighteen persons died of cold in one night.

HORRIBLE MURDER.—A correspondent of the Staunton Vindicator gives the particulars of a most fiendish murder committed near Waynesboro on Monday night last, at the house of Mr Stover:

"About 9 o'clock some one knocked at the door and one of the young ladies advanced to open it. A voice on the outside said 'doc't let the dog bite.' The door having been opened, a tall man, with pistol in hand, followed by two others similarly armed, entered, and said 'be still! the first that speaks I will blow his brains out.' Mr. Stove rose from his seat and said, 'What is your name? What do you want?' The three advanced towards him, calling to him to 'sit still or we'll blow your brains out.' Mr. Stover then seized a small ax near him and struck at the tall man, who dodged, the sharp edge of the ax grazing the right cheek, taking effect in the right shoulder. All seized the ax and twisted it out of his hands. In the scuffle a cap on one of the pistols exploded. Just then one of the young men slipped out, but was seen by the murderers, who followed, crying 'stop! stop!' and fired twice at him. When all were out of the house two additional shots were fired and all became quiet.

"Mr. M. R. Coalter, who lives but a few hundred yards away, attracted by the pistol shots, came over, and found Mr. Stover on the ground, within a few feet of his door, perfectly dead, being shot through the heart. Mr. Robert McCreary was found about one hundred yards off, shot through the right lung. He was shot at the door of the house when Mr. Stover was killed, and in trying to escape had gone as far as his strength would permit. He is having every attention, but it is feared his wound is mortal."

WELL DONE, ARKANSAS!—By the dispatches received last evening, it appears that Arkansas, profiting by the good example of Alabama, has taken a step in advance of our own, and has defeated the Constitution of its "menagerie" by votes actually cast at the polls. What will the Congressional conspirators say to this? What new device to meet the new exigency? The pretexts urged in the case of Alabama do not apply to that of Arkansas. Storms and floods did not favor, we suppose, one side more than the other. It was a fair fight, and the conservatives won.

Arkansas, as we have said, has gone ahead of Alabama, but the example of Alabama, no doubt, had vast moral effect in encouraging the people of Arkansas to take the position in which they have planted themselves. Let the other suffering States "thank God and take courage."

The seaboard cities experienced a storm of unusual severity on Friday night and Saturday. Snow fell to a considerable depth, blocking the railroads with heavy drifts, and completely stopping travel in some places, while in all directions the trains were greatly delayed. The wind, blowing a hurricane at the same time, caused some damage to buildings and shipping. The chief force of the storm was felt on the coast from Boston to Philadelphia.

The exhibition of O'Baldwin, the Irish giant, Saturday night, in St. Louis, was more numerously attended than any ever previously given there. It netted one thousand dollars. McCoole was present; he is in full training, and has reduced himself eleven pounds.

When the English mail steamer Danube was about to sail from Vera Cruz the other day, she was boarded by a customs officer, who said he had been informed that a shipment of money by the steamer, set forth as an export of $20,000, actually consisted of 20,000 ounces, or $320,000; and as specie exported is subjected to a heavy duty, he demanded an examination of the packages. The captain of the steamer refused this, saying he had signed bills of lading, and was responsible for the safe-keeping of the packages, and would not allow them to be interfered with. The officer of the port finally informed the captain that he would return to the shore and consult higher authorities, and that to prevent the surreptitious sailing of the ship he should take the pilot with him. The captain immediately ordered his engineer to put on full steam, and at once proceeded to sea, taking the Mexican officer along. When three miles out the too inquisitive official was allowed to take his boat and make for shore.
