SMUGGLERS TWO; ONE CAUGHT, OTHER GOES

Two Greeks, who arrived on the transport Sheridan, were wanted on a charge of smuggling. No difficulty was experienced in locating one of the men, and the deputy marshal quickly arrested him. The other, however, was on board the Sheridan and on the deputy trying to arrest him, a great rumpus arose in which some 400 men prevented the officer taking the man ashore. It appears that the deputy had not first informed the captain of the fact that the Greek was wanted. This is said to have annoyed the ship's officer, at any rate the Sheridan sailed with the Greek still on board. Later on in the evening a wireless was received from the Sheridan, which stated that the man was in custody, and the ship's people wanted to know what to do with him.

The two Greeks are accused of smuggling cigars and the custom house people are hot on the trail of such offenders. It is probable that the man who is on the transport will be returned by the next boat from the Coast.

THE POLLARDS

A portly individual blew into the Bergstrom Music Company's store yesterday afternoon and smiled at Sonny Sunha. Sonny smiled back and they both tittered. "What can I do for you?" queried the genial dispenser of tickets and calorified atmosphere. "Give me about four seats for Saturday night, somewhere in the front of the orchestra. Me, I got to take three daughters to that show so that they can slip the glad hand to Eva Moore."

And that is just about the sentiment of the people who go to the theater in Honolulu. From comic opera to high class legitimate plays is quite a step but the dainty little Australian actress is making it without a tremor and she has chosen the best place in the world in which to make it.

It is two years since Eva Moore was here as leading girl in the Lilliputian company but two years is not long enough for Honolulu people to forget her in. They want to see just how good she can be. They want to watch her act in a real drama and they want to give her a royal welcome back to the stage in Honolulu.

The "Charity Ball" is about as ambitious a play as the Pollards could have chosen. It is a play of New York life with all the stage settings and costumes that go with a representation of the life of the "Four hundred." But the members of the company have had great experience and they are certainly up to the parts which they have been studying.

John Van Buren is a clergyman, in the "Charity Ball" and he eventually marries Phyllis Lee, but he has an awful time getting there and the troubles incident to a love affair between a girl who wants to know something of the world and a very proper parson are well brought out in the play.

Alfred Goulding, in the part of the clergyman, has a hard line of turnips to hoe. He wants to love, he does love and he cannot help but love and yet, all the time his sense of duty to his chosen profession is holding him back. Just how cleverly the author has worked things out for the best and how Phyllis Lee arrives at the only end possible, must be seen to be appreciated.

The "Charity Ball" is a clever play, it is a good play and it is a successful play. There are experienced and known actors and actresses to put the show on the boards. The opening night should be a great success for the company. It will be, judging by the sale of tickets. But the box office does not represent the applause and appreciation that the people of Honolulu will have for their old time favorites.
