VINE-GROWING IN EUROPE.

VARIETIES OF FRUIT—SOIL—AGE OF WINE—A POPULAR FALLACY.

The San Francisco Herald publishes the following facts concerning vine-culture in Europe, gathered by a practical American traveler:

It is believed in France that a crop of any kind grown in a vineyard, between the rows of the vine, imparts a disagreeable taste to the wine, and that sometimes this taste will slightly resemble the particular vegetable or cereal thus grown. This idea is scouted in Italy, where crops are always grown between the rows of the vines, but the Frenchman would probably prove his case by the Italian wines, as they are so uniformly poor, which by every reason they should be good. It is almost universal to mingle the red and white fruit, either in the wine press or in the wine, in various proportions, more generally of about three of red to one of white. The idea seems to be that the red is more valuable for coloring qualities, while the white gives the delicacy of taste and the bouquet. Most growers prefer to start a new vineyard in the Autumn rather than in the Spring. They claim that they gain a whole year by it, while they are saved from the loss that always occurs from plants not living that are planted in the Spring. It is rare to make wine abroad from one variety of grape. Though most growers have their favorites, many kinds are almost always mingled in the wine. Three and four varieties thus mixed are common, but sometimes even ten or twelve kinds are mingled to produce one brand. Little of this is done in our country. The French, who doubtless understand the culture of the vine better than any other people, say that the art of adapting each particular species of vine to that soil which is most congenial for its culture is still in its infancy. Every aid which enlightened science can bring to throw light on this subject is closely studied and observed in France. This involves also all the studies and speculations of the difference noticed in the same vineyard and of same varieties, most extraordinary in character, and which is seen, perhaps, to the best effect in the wine. The prevailing idea is that these differences are, in the main, ascribable to differences of soils, about which a world of study and investigation is and has been for years going on. Preference is always given to the hills for a vineyard over a plain. A warm hill-side, with wooded summit and southern exposure, is considered the most favorable site for a vineyard. Still there are wonderful exceptions to this. The splendid wines of Gironde, near Bordeaux, grow on the plain. Both sides of the Rhine and Moselle seem equally well adapted to the vine. Some of the best wine of Rheims is grown on vineyards looking northward and away up to the extreme northern line of grape-producing Europe. There are some parts of France where a western exposure is found by experience to answer the best. As a general rule, in northern latitudes a southern aspect is preferred. In the south an eastern exposure. Any soil not retaining stagnant water will grow the vine; but those that are light and dry, and stony or sandy, are considered the best. The lighter and drier the soil, the smaller the plant, the sweeter the fruit and the better the wine. That soil which is so very light and dry that it is literally fit for nothing else is abroad often considered as especially adapted to the grape. A soil should be so light and porous that it will not retain water, to be best fitted for the grape; and no matter how poor or thin it may be, if on a hillside, with a favorable exposure and a warm sun, it is certain to yield a fair wine.

It has become almost universally considered that great age improves wine, and that the "older the better" is a true adage. This is not at all true. It is a gross error to suppose that wine which will keep should only be drank when it will keep no longer. Wines differ very much in their character as respects endurance, and in the length of time necessary to bring them to the highest excellence. Mere age is no criterion. For example, the highest grades of Burgundy will not keep more than twenty years, while it will not improve after ten or twelve years. And it is doubtful if it is ever so good as when it is six years old from the vintage. Champagne may support itself twenty or thirty years in the bottle, and will, perhaps, improve for eight or ten years, certainly not after that; and the true bon vieux would not ask for it more than ten years old, and many would prefer it much younger. On the other hand, the German hocks mature late. They improve every year, if well kept, till they are forty, and will keep splendidly for a century. Some of the finer red wines of France are kept in wood for fifteen years before they are bottled, and they will keep 150 years. Most wines which will keep to old age lose some of their qualities as they grow old. Age softens the French wines in their spirituous aroma, but often is fatal to their bouquet.

THE TRIBUNE ALMANAC REPRINTED.—Complete sets from 1838 to 1868, both inclusive, bound in two volumes. Price $10.

Politicians, Public Libraries, and all others interested, will be glad to know that we have been enabled to reproduce THE TRIBUNE ALMANAC for the years 1838 to 1868, inclusive, excepting 1842, in which year none was issued—comprehending the Politician's Register, and the Whig Almanac, containing Annual Election Returns by States and Counties, lists of Presidents, Cabinets, Judges of the Supreme Court, Foreign Ministers, Governors of States, &c., with Summaries of Acts of Congress, and other Political Statistics. The following introduction to the volumes, by Mr. Greeley, more fully explains their scope:

"In the Fall of 1837—years before the establishment of THE TRIBUNE—the October Elections having developed a popular uprising against the Jackson-Van Buren dynasty which had for ten years seemed invincible—I was moved to issue a POLITICAL REGISTER for 1838 intended mainly to embody the election Returns of that year, and compare them with those of some preceding year. The reception of that little annual was such as to justify its reproduction for each succeeding year—that of 1842 only excepted—until the issue for 1868 will complete a series of thirty annual Registers of Election Returns, with other useful political and statistical matter, afforded for a trifle to each reader, though the preparation of each issue now involves a total cost of more than $1,000. This annual has been known successively as The Politician's Register, Whig Almanac, and Tribune Almanac, under which last name it has been issued for several years past. The stereotype plates of the earlier issues having been consumed in the fire which destroyed THE TRIBUNE building in 1845, it has for some years past been impossible to procure full sets of the work at any rate, and the imperfect sets from time to time thrown upon the market have commanded fabulous prices.

"At last the new art of PHOTO-LITHOGRAPHY—as yet in its infancy, but giving promise of great results in the future—by means distant—has rendered it possible to reproduce the old issues at a moderate cost; and it was resolved that a limited number of full sets of the work—at least so far as its contents were not ephemeral—should be photo-lithographed and offered to the public. Of that resolve, the work herewith presented is the fruit. As it will be wholly unique, and of great interest to historians and politicians, I trust that most of the sets may be promptly secured for Public Libraries, where they may be preserved and remain generally accessible. Those who fail to obtain a set directly will probably miss their only opportunity. HORACE GREELEY."

The complete sets of the Register and Almanac are comprised in two neatly bound volumes, and are now ready. Price for the two volumes, $10.

Those wishing to secure these interesting Political Statistics should send in their orders immediately, as only 1,000 copies are printed.

Each order must be accompanied with the cash. Address THE TRIBUNE, New-York.
