PHOTOGRAPHING SUN-FLAMES WITHOUT AN ECLIPSE.

To the Editor of The Tribune.

SIR: I send you with this some interesting extracts from letters addressed to me by Prof. Young of Dartmouth College. The discoveries he announces are of the highest scientific value. HENRY MORTON,
President of the Stevens Inst. of Technology.

Hoboken, N. J., Oct. 3, 1870.

HANOVER, N. H., Sept. 26, 1870.

Prof. H. MORTON—DEAR SIR: I write to inform you that on Thursday last, Sept. 22, about 11 o'clock a. m., Hanover mean time, I was so fortunate as to see the sodium lines D and D 2 reversed in the spectrum of the umbra of a large spot near the eastern limb of the sun. At the same time the C and F lines were also reversed, but with the great dispersive power of my new spectroscope, I see this so often in the solar spots that it has ceased to be remarkable. The figure gives the appearance of the sodium lines. In the umbra of the spot the D 2 line was not visible, but in the penumbra was plainly seen as a dark shade represented in the figure.

I am not aware that this reversal of the sodium lines in a spot spectrum has ever been observed before. Its reversal in the spectra of prominences is not very unusual. A small prominence on the western limb of the sun which was visible the same forenoon presented all the following bright lines, viz.: C, D 1, D 2, D 3, 1474, b 1, b 2, b 4, 1989, 5, 2001.5, 2031, F, 2861.5, 2706, and h—15 in all. In the spot spectrum the magnesium lines b, b 2, and b 4 were not reversed, but while the shade which accompanies the lines was perceptibly widened, the central black line itself was thinned and lightened.

C. A. YOUNG.
Yours, &c.

HANOVER, N. H., Sept. 28, 1870.

Prof. HENRY MORTON—Dear Sir: I write to tell you that this afternoon, with the help of Mr. N. O. Bly, our photographer, who has assisted me in the matter with great skill and interest, I have succeeded in obtaining photographs of protuberances on the sun's limb, of which I enclose a specimen. They were made by attaching a Dallmeyer photographic camera to the eye-piece of the telescope, and opening the slit somewhat widely we worked through the hydrogen line near G.

As a picture, the little thing amounts to nothing, because the unsteadiness of the air, and the mal-adjustment of the polar axis of the equatorial caused the image to shift its place slightly during the long exposure of three one-half minutes which was required, thus destroying all the details. Still, the double-headed form of the prominence is evident, and the possibility of taking these photographs is established.

Success will depend upon the use of more sensitive chemicals (those used to-day were the same ordinarily employed for portraits), and a very careful adjustment of the equatorial axes and the clockwork; I fear a telescope of much larger aperture than mine will also be found necessary, in order to produce pictures that will really give much of an idea of the form and texture of these beautiful clouds. * * * To-day, also, in examining a spot which reversed the hydrogen lines very finely, I observed on opening the slit that the phenomenon was caused by two enormous protuberances like luminous clouds, which in the spectroscope shined brightly even upon the surface of the sun; their form and motion were distinctly traced, and their greatest length was about 4' of arc, or 111,000 miles. * * * Truly yours, C. A. YOUNG.
