NOTES ON EDUCATION.

The Chicago Tribune makes some significant statements which show that education in the South is in a deplorable condition. "Thirty per cent of the white people," it says, "and 70 per cent of the blacks in the South are illiterate. Looking at the matter from a political point of view, there are 1,350,000 illiterate voters in the South, and of these Kentucky, whose percentage of illiteracy is the smallest, furnishes 43,000 white and 55,000 colored. In Louisiana, where percentage is the largest but one, the situation is well nigh discouraging, and it adds to the despair of the outlook that all the schools of the State have been closed until next April, owing to Democratic opposition to common-school education."

"It is a mournful fact," says The Kansas City Journal, "that public schools have been forced rather than welcomed in the South. Their necessity is now recognized, but in too many instances they are expected to be furnished to order. That is impossible. The common schools of the North and West are not by any means perfect, and yet they are the growth of years of expense and labor. To hand money over to officials in such States as Alabama without any provision against mismanagement would be a folly which would soon cause a reaction and consequent defeat of the whole scheme. . . . The best schools come from the voluntary efforts of the people and when the will is wanting contributed funds are not likely to furnish remarkable results. The Morrill bill appropriating lands for collegiate purposes was really successful only in States where the lands were intelligently and economically managed. The same would be the case with a national common school educational fund unless some provision should be made against negligence and incompetency."

The University of Alabama is crowded with students, and no more can be received until the new buildings are completed, which will be in a short time. This is the first time that the University has ever been full, and indicates a gratifying state of prosperity.

The German language is taught in nearly all the white public schools of St. Louis. The entire number of pupils who are now studying German is over 20,000, or more than half of the whole number of pupils in all the schools of St. Louis.

The newspapers in the South have generally commented on the Rev. R. Heber Newton's criticisms of the public school system, and many of them call for the introduction of some form of industrial education. "If it be true," says The Augusta Chronicle, "as Mr. Newton states it, that the present system of instruction is wofully deficient, and its tendency entirely one-sided, and that it is giving to the youths of the country a dislike for manual labor, which is a very dangerous teaching, then we say emphatically that nowhere should reform be more vigorously insisted upon than at the South. The very complex nature of our population demands this with trumpet tones. And it is not at all necessary that we should wait until New-England makes an experiment."

Colonel J. W. Nicholson, president of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College, has been mainly instrumental in organizing a useful society in the northern part of the State. It is known as the Louisiana Educational Association, and its principal objects are to awaken the people to the importance of education, to systematize and improve the methods of instruction, and promote the interests of education in all departments.

The Trades Council formed in Nottingham, England, two years ago to promote technical education, has established a college which will be opened next month. At a public meeting held at Nottingham a few days ago Mr. Samuel Morley made an eloquent address in favor of technical education. He said that working men were wanted now to make themselves the masters of the work they had to do by the means of intellectual thought and study. Some of the Continental municipalities had made the most magnificent provision for the higher education of working men. Abundant facilities were afforded to them for perfecting themselves in their particular handicrafts, and this higher training had been found to be of extreme value in the production of a high quality of goods. In the counting-houses and warehouses of England clerks from abroad were presenting themselves with qualifications of a very high kind, the result of a training in schools where the teaching was essentially commercial. He pressed for the adoption of facilities of that kind in England.

Sewing, cutting and fitting are taught in all the girls' primary schools in France, and the programme for the higher primaries includes household industry and some of the trades particularly adapted to women. The most important measure of the Liberal party with reference to the education of women in France is the law of December 21, 1880, under which lycées for girls are being organized. The strongest advocates of the measure, as Camille See, author of the law, and Jules Ferry, whose energetic efforts secured its passage, were in favor of establishments equivalent in the grade and duration of the course, and in test examinations, to the lycées for boys. "The time has come," says a friend of the measure, "when it is necessary to bridge over the chasm that separates men from women in modern society."
