NOTES ON EDUCATION.

Female education is making rapid progress in India. Intelligent and wealthy natives doing much to advance it. A Bombay merchant has lately given 15,000 rupees toward the founding of a girls' school; and the Maharaja of Travancore has given a large sum in aid of female medical education.

The Evening High School in Boston had last year 1,643 pupils, and a larger number is expected this year.

There are in Great Britain 212 reformatory and industrial schools, the total number of pupils being 25,337.

As the result of the new Education Code in London the reading is improving, while the writing and arithmetic are falling off in merit.

In an article in "Education" on modern languages as a college discipline A. M. Elliott, of Johns Hopkins University, says: "If we inquire into the depreciatory feeling with which the modern languages are regarded by scholars generally, we shall find, I think, that the responsibility for a great part of it, at least, rests upon the shoulders of those who have the chief power of appointment to positions in our higher institutions. The fatal college nepotism that has pervaded this whole system in many places has practically rendered it a sort of closed corporation to all who are educated outside the pale of their own individual sanctuaries. The natural consequence has been that young, inexperienced, and, only too often, poorly prepared assistants have been called to office, and through them the departments have had to suffer not alone for a lack of efficient instruction, but also in the general appreciation both of the student and of an intelligent public. This misfortune has fallen more frequently upon the modern languages, perhaps, than upon any other departments, from the simple fact that the idea is so generally prevalent that just anybody can teach them."

The sophomores of Lehigh University have wisely passed resolutions declaring that they will not participate in hazing, and will endeavor to discountenance it.

A CHAT WITH MARY ANDERSON.

From The Pall Mall Gazette.

"I found Miss Anderson in her pretty drawing room," says one of our representatives who called upon the American actress yesterday, "looking remarkably well, though some of her friends declare that she is overworked from much rehearsing." "I return to London," she said, "delighted with my provincial experiences. My tour, you know, lasted six weeks, and it was to me a time of much exertion, but of great pleasure. I met audiences of a generous, enthusiastic character, and my efforts to please them were recognized most cordially. I visited Edinburgh, Glasgow, Manchester, Liverpool, Dublin, and Birmingham. The Scotch people, by the way, I found more eager and responsive than I had expected them to be; they are not a cold people, but equally warm-hearted and intellectual. At Dublin I was honored with a noble tribute from the impulsive and impetuous Irish, and I think that my acting has won for me many good friends in that capital. In the English cities I found the same good will that has been extended to me in London. It was a most pleasant tour. During the summer I have travelled much, and have taken my rest in wandering from one interesting place to another. The days have been diversified by study, and by the essential preparation for my new season at the Lyceum. I have been but a little time in London. I begin my season with Galatea and Clarice because the bill is a good one, and because, remembering the lively and generous interest with which it was received last season, I venture to think that it is still attractive to playgoers. I have been mindful, too, of the desire to see Clarice in particular which, as I understand, has been expressed by many American visitors now in London. The wishes and feelings of my own country people are naturally of importance to me. Later in the season I shall appear as Juliet, and it is my hope to succeed in presenting Shakespeare tragedy in a manner worthy the acceptance of a thoughtful and critical public. No, I would really rather say nothing specific as to what we intend to do. After the brilliant pageants which have been seen on the London stage in Shakespearean revivals it will require unusual efforts to satisfy the public taste. I have prepared to endeavor to meet the occasion with adequate thoroughness."

"I should like to ask you a question, Miss Anderson, about the numerous reports that have been current concerning your retirement to a convent, and so on. They are untrue, of course!" "Of course; these ridiculous rumors have reached my ears, although it has not been in my way to see much of the newspapers this summer, or to hear much of the current theatrical gossip which appears to be so popular in them. I wonder what kind friend invented the story that ascribes to me the intention to become a Carmelite nun. I have never entertained the intention of taking the veil. It is really difficult to understand why newspapers and persons should be so heedless as they often are in statements as to others. I am sincerely gratified at the success with which my professional efforts have been attended here in Great Britain."

HAVE NOW READY.

I.—AN OUTLINE OF THE FUTURE. RELIGION OF THE WORLD, with a consideration of the facts and deductions on which it will probably be based. By T. Lloyd Stanley. Octavo, cloth, $2.

"The religion of the coming century in civilized lands—the world's religion of a not distant future—will, in the writer's belief, rest mainly on the teaching of Christ as that teaching becomes separated by criticism from the additions made to it by his disciples and by the early church. . . . The great unity, the Unity of Life, physical and spiritual, will be recognized as a prominent feature of the Master's teaching. But the Christianity future will be inferred from the incubus of the marvellous and the legendary."—Extract from author's Preface.
