LITERARY NOTES.

A complimentary breakfast is to be given to Mr. Edmund Gosse at the Hotel Brunswick, on Monday morning.

"The Evolution of Dodd," will be published by D. Lothrop & Co. This is the book which has been heralded as a sort of "Ginx's Baby" and which describes the effect of the public school system upon a sensitive child.

The prettiest of literary anecdotes has been related by Wilhelm Grimm, one of the pair of famous story-tellers. One day a little girl rang their bell and met him in the hall with the words, "Are you the Mr. Grimm who writes the pretty tales?" "Yes, I and my brother." "And that of the clever little tailor who married the princess?" "Yes, certainly." "Well," said the child, producing the book, "it is said here that every one who doesn't believe it must pay him a thaler. Now, I don't believe that a princess ever married a tailor. I haven't so much as a thaler, but here is a groschen and please say I hope to pay the rest by degrees." Just then Jacob came up, and the brothers had an interesting interview with the little dame; but they could not persuade her to take away the groschen which she had laid on the table.

"The Bibliotheca Sacra"—which is now published in Oberlin, Ohio—costs at present three instead of four dollars a year.

Mr. W. A. Hovey, the author of "Causerie," a little volume published a few years ago, has prepared a book entitled, "Mind-reading and Beyond." It will have a hundred engravings illustrating curious experiments and it will be published by Lee & Shepard.

Mr. Dolby tells an amusing story of the way in which Dickens's "Mugby Junction" was first suggested to him. "On the arrival of the train at Rugby," he says, "it was discovered that the carriage in which we were travelling was on fire. While I was busy superintending the transfer of the light baggage, Mr. Dickens came along the platform in a state of great excitement, and requested me to accompany him to the refreshment room. Then, standing in the doorway, and pointing with his finger, he described the picture he particularly wished to impress on my mind. 'You see, Dolby—stove to right hand—torn cocoanut matting on floor—counter across room—coffee-urn—tea-urn—plates of rusks—piles of sawdust sandwiches and shrunken-up oranges—bottles—tumblers—and glasses on counter—and, behind counter, note particularly our missis.' When the train was fairly off again, Mr. Dickens proceeded to explain. Entering the refreshment room, he and Mr. Wills had each asked for a cup of coffee, which was supplied to them. While Wills was feeling in his pocket for some small change wherewith to pay, Mr. Dickens reached across the counter for the sugar and milk, when both articles were suddenly snatched away from him and placed beneath the counter, while his ears were greeted with the remark, made in shrill and shrewish tones, 'You sha'n't have any milk and sugar 'till you two fellows have paid for your coffee.' This speech was delivered by the woman whom he had pointed out to me as 'our Missis,' and it gave infinite amusement to a page in buttons, who, with that demoniacal spirit which seems to seize some boys at the idea of somebody else 'catching it,' was so overjoyed that he burst out into an uncontrollable fit of laughter. The discomfited travellers left their coffee on the counter, after an apology for making so free with the sugar-basin. But it was an evil day for that 'buttons' for he figured as 'The Boy at Mugby' in the next Christmas number of 'All the Year Round.'"

The work which Edward and George, the two sons of the Prince of Wales, have prepared together, will be published in April in two bulky volumes of five hundred pages each. They will contain many illustrations.

"La Revue Contemporaine" is the title of the new magazine which is about to appear in Paris. Zola is its principal contributor; and the first number will contain an article on Edgar Poe by M. Emile Hennequin.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

LORD TENNYSON'S NEW BOOK.

BECKET.

By Alfred, Lord Tennyson, Poet Laureate. Globe 8vo, $1 50.

FROM THE LONDON ATHENÆUM.

"Whatever may be said of the success or failure with which Lord Tennyson has mingled the golden threads of fable with his historic yarn, few will deny that the character of Rosamond is a great success. In truth, there is not in modern poetry a lovelier portrait. The guileless, confiding innocence of the English girl, her tender reliance upon the man she loves, are in entire harmony with the dauntless courage she displays when it comes to the question of saving her own life at the expense of bastardizing her child. It would be hard to find, in the entire range of English drama, a more touching and beautiful scene than that in Rosamond's bower. . . . On the whole, indeed, we cannot err in placing this tragedy very high in the dramatic poetry of this century."

J. W. MACKAIL, IN THE ACADEMY.

"For the lyric itself, no praise can be too high. There is not another man living who could have written it, and Lord Tennyson himself has never written anything more beautiful. . . . I am not aware that dramatic verse of this quality has been written since Shakespeare. . . . Much of the dramatic art in 'Becket' is so delicate that it can only be appreciated on a second or third reading. . . . But, in spite of such blemishes 'Becket' is entitled to rank as a great play, and worthy of Lord Tennyson."

G. H. LEWES.

"A kaleidoscope of lovely, wise and humorous fragments is constantly shifting before my mind's eye, and I try to piece them into a whole, and reveal the noble work . . . The play is instinct with dramatic life, and is as various as Shakespeare."

JOSEPH HATTON, IN THE CHRISTIAN UNION.

"Lord Tennyson's poem is a masterly work, dramatically strong, and no doubt historically correct. A'Becket was an intriguing priest, but his personal ambition went hand-in-hand with the temporal interests of the Church. . . . How grandly and with what dramatic force Lord Tennyson has set forth the martyrdom everybody will read in the new book that will soon be in everybody's hand."

FROM THE LONDON TIMES.

"We have said enough and quoted enough to show that Becket is pre-eminently worthy of Lord Tennyson's genius and fame. It is dramatic in its conception and execution, full of poetry and fire, its versification is strong and varied in cadence, and its varied episodes are well conceived and skilfully woven together. . . . We can confidently express our conviction that Becket is a drama of great power, finely conceived and finely executed, as well as a poem of great and varied beauty."

THE NEW DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY.

Now ready, bound in cloth, price $3 25.

Vol. I (ABBADIE—ANNE), royal 8vo, of the DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY.

EDITED BY LESLIE STEPHEN.

Further volumes will be issued at intervals of three months, and it is confidently expected that the work will be completed in about fifty volumes.

THE DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY is intended to supply a want which has for more than half a century been generally felt. Every reader has recognized the utility of the great French Dictionaries of Universal Biography. At the present day such a work would be rendered impracticable by the great increase of the results of historical inquiry. Some division of labor seems to be imperatively necessary. Each nation should have its own Biographical Dictionary. The German and Belgian Dictionaries, now in progress, are instances of such work abroad; and it is intended to provide a Dictionary for our own nation worthy to take a place beside them.

The "Dictionary of National Biography" will include lives of inhabitants of the British Islands from the earliest historical period. Living persons are excluded. The first aim has been to give biographies which shall embody with sufficient fulness the latest results of historical research, and be founded upon an examination of original documents. A clear indication will be given in each article of the authorities which have been used, and from which further information may be derived.

In later volumes it will be sought to remedy any errors of excess or defect which may be pointed out in the first. It is confidently hoped, in any case, that the execution of the work will be not unworthy of the aim implied in its title; and that it will take its place beside the completest Biographical Dictionaries hitherto published.

"For years past there has been abundant need of an exhaustive work on English biography like those which learned societies, under royal or national patronage, are issuing in Germany and Belgium. . . . It is to the exertions of a publishing firm and a private man of letters that we owe the present able undertaking. An examination of the first fifty volumes of which it is to consist shows that the expectations which have been formed concerning it will not be disappointed. In fullness, in thoroughness and in general accuracy it leaves little or nothing to be desired. It compares very favorably with its two foreign models in most essential points and in one at least it is distinctly superior. . . . Some dozen years hence then we may expect to see the fifty goodly volumes of the Dictionary of National Biography lying side by side on the shelves of our libraries. If all of them are compiled with the learning, the intelligence and the general accuracy evinced in the first part, the place they will hold is not likely to be disputed for many generations."—[London Athenæum.

"We have before us in this handsome volume the first instalment of a work which promises to do credit alike to the enterprise of its publishers and the scholarly assiduity of its editor. Every literary workman must have felt the lack of such a book of reference. Since the 'Biographia Britannica' no attempt has been made on anything like an adequate scale to provide a complete storehouse of British Biography. The magnitude of the task has, not unnaturally, deterred publishers from attempting it. . . . In any such undertaking the editor's chief difficulty is, in the first place, to determine who shall be deemed worthy of notice, and, in the second place, to preserve a due proportion in the length of the articles. In both respects Mr. Stephen has shown excellent judgment. . . . But it is the shorter notices rather than the more extended monographs upon which the real utility of the work will depend. These, so far as we have looked into them, seem to have been executed with great care, and to embody, in most instances, a good deal of original research. . . . The attention devoted to theatrical biography will greatly enhance the value of the Dictionary."—[Pall Mall Gazette.

"The appearance of the first volume of the 'Dictionary of National Biography' will probably call the attention of many persons for the first time to the fact that such a work was wanting in our national literature. We have all sorts of Biographical Dictionaries, and of late we are having a goodly supply of what we may call classified or serial biographies; but we want a well-arranged and carefully-ordered Dictionary of National Biography, such as that edited by Mr. Leslie Stephen promises to become. . . . Such a work, if successful, ought to become a sort of bead-roll of fame for Englishmen. It ought to be something much better than the Golden Book of Venice. It will be a family distinction to have had the memoir of one of its members enshrined in this national biography. The undertaking is one to which every one must wish success, and in which the best writers of the day might be proud to bear a hand."—[London Daily News.

"THE BUNTLING BALL."

A Graeco-American Play.

A KEEN SATIRE ON NEW-YORK SOCIETY.

Illustrated by C. D. Weldon.

Evening Gazette, Boston: "Abundant wit of the most trenchant kind."

THE CRITICS PUZZLED.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES writes:

"BOSTON, Dec. 17, '84.

"I began reading 'THE BUNTLING BALL,' meaning to take but a taste of it, and never stopped until I had finished it. It is ingenious, witty, fluent and wholesome. I should like to know who the author is."

JULIAN HAWTHORNE says:

"I GUESS JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL WROTE 'THE BUNTLING BALL.'"

COL. JOHN HAY Says:

"I have read 'The Buntling Ball' with great interest and pleasure. The guesses as to its authorship must be restricted to a very limited field. The choruses are masterpieces of wit and versification. There is a dexterity and science of rhythm that betray a master of verse. Mr. Stoddard and Mr. Stedman, we know, used to write admirable burlesques and extravaganzas. I mention both of these eminent poets because there is a variety of treatment in this satire which naturally suggests collaboration.

OTHER GUESSERS.

DR. WM. A. HAMMOND says it was written by EDGAR FAWCETT and adds:—"One of the cleverest satires I ever read."
EDWARD EVERETT HALE says it was written by ROBERT GRANT and adds:—"It is very bright and clever."
EDGAR FAWCETT says it was written by H. H. BOYESEN, and adds:—"It gave me more than one hearty laugh."
JOSH BILLINGS says it was written by ORPHEUS C. KERR and adds:—"Its satire is delicate, its verse graceful."
ALFRED AYRES says it was written by H. C. BUNNER and adds:—"Full of vivacity and rich and dainty words."
JOHN HABBERTON says it was written by W. A. CROFFUT and adds:—"The several classes have been carefully studied."
BRANDER MATTHEWS says it was written by ROBERT GRANT, and adds: "Neat in its rhyming, pungent in its satire."
HON. S. S. COX says it was written by EDITORS OF "LIFE," and adds: "Full of vivacity and rich and dainty words."
J. R. McKAY says it was written by BRANDER MATTHEWS, and adds: "An exquisite array of verse."
ROSSITER JOHNSON says it was written by W. A. CROFFUT, and adds: "Exhibits a wonderful command of versification."

THE GREAT AMERICAN NOVEL.

So long looked for and so frequently announced, has at last been written. Its title is

RAMONA:

A Story. By HELEN JACKSON (H. H.).

The Atlantic Monthly says of the author that she is "a Murillo in literature," and that the story "is one of the most artistic creations of American literature." Says a lady, herself an author, "To me it is the most distinctive piece of work we have had in this country since 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' and its exquisite finish of style is beyond that classic." "The book is truly an American novel," says the Boston Advertiser. "Ramona is one of the most charming creations of modern fiction," says Charles D. Warner in The Hartford Courant. "The romance of the story is irresistibly fascinating," says The Independent.

ROBERTS BROTHERS, Boston.

"BLESS THEM, EVERYBODY ELSE HAS an organ, and why shouldn't the babies?" asks the Suspension Bridge Journal, speaking of Babyhood. "The second number," says The Churchman, "sustains the reputation of the first. 'The First Steps,' by Dr. Yale, treats of the baby's locomotion, and if read by parents will hereafter diminish the number of bow-legs and knock-knees. . . . A subscription to Babyhood would be a good investment for all young parents." Babyhood's novel scope and practical purpose can best be understood by examining a copy. Babyhood surprises and pleases everybody. Sold everywhere, or address 18 Spruce-st., New-York. $1 50 a year; 15 cents a copy.
