SWINBURNE'S PARODIES.

A BOOK LONG SINCE OUT OF PRINT.

From The London Spectator.

Before we leave the subject of parodies, we cannot resist calling the attention of our readers to a little known collection of verse of this kind, entitled, "Specimens of Modern Poets, the Heptalogia, or the Seven against Sense, a Cap with Seven Bells" (Chatto & Windus, 1880). It is, we believe, an open secret that "these specimens of modern poets" were written by Mr. Swinburne, though, to throw the critic off the scent, it contains a poem in imitation of the author of "Atalanta." In any case, the specimens are excellently done, and by a master of style and rhythm. The book opens with "The Higher Pantheism in a Nutshell." Exquisite is the imitation of Tennyson's vaguer metaphysical manner contained in the couplet:

Doubt is faith in the main: but faith on the whole is doubt:
We cannot believe by faith: but could we believe without?

Delicious the mixture of a country metaphor and the higher mathematics in.

Why and whither and how? for barley and rye are not clover;
Neither are straight lines curves; yet over is under and over.

Then follows a human application of the doctrine:

Body and spirit are twins: God only knows which is which:
The soul squats down in the flesh like a tinker drunk in a ditch.

The spirit of Browning's later manner as exhibited in poems such as "James Lee's Wife" is admirably hit off in "John Jones." The beginning, "At the Piano," just catches the allusive method which flowered in "Dramatis Personæ":

Love me and leave me; what love bids retrieve me;
can June's list grasp May?
Leave me and love me; hopes eyed once above me
like spring's sprouts decay;
Fall as the snow falls, when summer leaves grow false—
cards packed for storm's play.

Perhaps, however, the best of all is the imitation of Mrs. Browning. Not only is that poet's appalling habit of clipping old words, or inventing new ones, of forging hideous compounds, and of rhyming anything to anything—sins of commission which must have sunk irreparably a lesser genius—excellently imitated, but we get exactly the verbal atmosphere of the author of "Aurora Leigh" in such verses as:

Ah, men's poets men's conventions crust you round and swathe you mist-like,
And the world's wheels grind your spirits down the dust ye overtred.

Mr. Swinburne's admiration for Mr. Coventry Patmore is well known, and therefore it is only natural to find in this volume "The Person of the House," with the sub-heading "The Monthly Nurse." The poet of innocence, after the birth of the baby, maunders on to the mother and nurse in the following mellifluous strain:

Let love that does not look believe;
Let knowledge that believes not, look:
Truth pins her trust on falsehood's sleeve,
While reason blunders by the book.

He is, however, soon cut short in his harangue by the all-powerful "person in the house:"

Then Mrs. Prig addressed me thus:
"Sir, if you'll be advised by me,
You'll leave the blessed babe to us;
It's my belief he wants his tea.

We cannot quote anything from the parodies on Rossetti or on Mr. Swinburne himself, but we must mention the "Last Words of a Seventh-rate Poet," in which the magnificent social tone of the late Lord Lytton's verse is very well mocked. The air of "the Legations," the scraps of French, the general talk of Duchesses, and of the gilded Bohemians of the third Empire, which "Owen Meredith" affected, is caught with great success. We cannot, however, find space here for more quotations, and must leave further exploration in the "Heptalogia" to those who are lucky enough to come across this rare and curious book, long since out of print. At the same time, we cannot help expressing regret that some of the phrases in the poems should have been turned in a way capable of offending the general reader. That there is no real harm in them, we fully admit; but many worthy persons would, nevertheless be very much shocked by coming across them.
