Domestic Markets.

NEW YORK, November 2.—The Post's financial article says: All the Wall street markets continue dull. All sales of gold have been at 110¾ on gold loans. Borrowers have paid for use from 7 to 1 per cent per annum, and 1-32 for two days. Foreign exchange is quiet, with business on a basis of $4 85 and $4 86½ for prime bankers' sixty day and demand sterling, nominal rates being $4 84½ and $4 88. Government bonds firm. May and November issues being quoted ex coupon. State bonds at the board were neglected. The ten market is easy, with call loans 2½@3 per cent, and with prime mercantile paper 5 to 7 per cent.

The Germ of the Difficulty.

General Longstreet, whom a good many Northern Republicans will remember as a most uncomfortable man to meet in a gray uniform, has been telling the people of New Orleans what he thinks of the situation. In the course of his remarks he made the following centre shot, which evinces deeper insight into the Southern character and the ultimate causes which underlie the present sectional strife than anything we have seen. He said:

"Men can't all think alike, and the trouble with the Southern people always has been that they won't tolerate any difference of opinion. If God Almighty had intended all men to think just alike He might as well have made but one man. I have decided and acted as I thought duty required, and other men are at liberty to do the same."

That one phrase, "The Southern people won't tolerate any difference of opinion," is of immense significance. It is one of the characteristics which distinguish the Latin races. Compare, for instance, and election in England with one in France. There the Saxon and Latin characteristics are brought into contrast. In both countries leaders and masses grow very hot and excited over the campaign. They shout and call names, and "nail the lies" of their opponents, very much as we do in America. But it is when the election is over that the different characteristics of race are most apparent. The beaten Frenchman, on the contrary, grows more desperate with defeat, and at once endeavors to start a revolution. The minority is not willing to accept the rule of the majority, and it is for this reason that profound political thinkers have so little faith in the permanent success of Republicanism in France or Spain. There is always a discontented minority scheming for a change of government. Just the same contrast exists in the United States. In the North, as De Tocqueville remarks, the town meeting is the type of government. In the town meeting the vote of the majority ends discussion. From its decision there is no appeal. No matter how heated and determined our political contests, the day after election finds every one good natured, bets are paid, the newspapers dilate on the "lesson" of the result and the war paint is laid aside until the next campaign. In the South, particularly in Louisiana, there is enough of French blood and aristocratic ideas to give partisan politics a wholly different character. The white Democrats of the South can not get over the idea that they know about as much as three Republicans, white or colored, and they therefore feel abused because one blueblooded vote does not count as much as those of three or four Northern white men or negroes. The equality of suffrage is to the haughty Creoles and white aristocrats of Louisiana as rank an absurdity as was the theory in 1861 that a regiment of Yankees could hold its own against a regiment of Southern fire eaters. The rebels learned during the course of the war that a Northern "Yankee," though he had never carried a revolver or bowie knife at home, was just as brave and effective a soldier as a Southern desperado who had fought a duel or two, and carried weapons since his boyhood. But there still remains in the Southern temperament that intolerance of opposing opinion, that unreadiness to accept the verdict of a majority, which existed before the war. This, as General Longstreet so shrewdly points out, is the underlying causes of nine-tenths of the political troubles at the South. They pretend to have accepted the results of the war, but in reality they have only made a virtue of doing so because they could do nothing better at the time. They are the discontented monarchists in France, forced to live under a republican government while they are at heart in revolt against its most essential principles—the equality of citizenship and the supremacy of majorities.—Cleveland Leader.

A lawyer in Illinois recently committed suicide because old age was creeping over him, and the younger men were taking away his practice.

MONETARY.

NEW ORLEANS REPUBLICAN OFFICE,
MONDAY, EVENING, November 2, 1874.

The banks continued open as usual to receive payment of obligations due at their counters, but the money market generally was at a stand still, and nothing transpired to indicate any variation in quotations either of discounts, gold or exchange. Nothing whatever transpired in securities.

COMMERCIAL.

MONDAY, November 2, 1874.

COTTON—Business was almost entirely suspended to-day in order to enable all employes to perform their duty at the polls. Most factors covered up their samples, but there was, nevertheless, some little inquiry, and, as far as reported, only 200 bales changed hands at prices indicating no quotable variation. One or two offers, based on slight concessions, were refused. The Cotton Exchange was closed throughout the day. The decline of 1-16d on middling uplands at Liverpool was generally known sometime before noon. We repeat Saturday's quotations as follows:
