THE WEATHER REPORT

Records for Last Twenty-four Hours and Official Forecasts.

Washington, Aug. 7.—Pressure has fallen considerably in the lake region and New England and there has been a corresponding rise in temperature in those districts. High temperatures now prevail from New England westward to the Mississippi Valley. There has been some local cooling due to thunder showers, which have been somewhat more prevalent than in the preceding twenty-four hours.

The indications point to showers in the Ohio Valley, the lake region and locally in the middle Atlantic and east Gulf states during the next forty-eight hours.

High temperatures will continue east of the Mississippi, except for the local and temporary cooling due to thunder showers.

Pressure is falling in the Rocky Mountain region and there seems to be a low developing over the northern plateau regions. This will tend to prolong the high temperatures in the East.

Winds for Tuesday and Wednesday.—North Atlantic, moderate southwest to west and occasional thunder showers; middle Atlantic, moderate southwest and generally fair weather; south Atlantic, moderate southwest to south and generally fair weather; east Gulf, light to moderate south and showers; west Gulf, fair and probably Wednesday; not so warm in interior.

Southern New England—Scattered showers and thunderstorms Tuesday and probably Wednesday; not so warm.

Maryland, District of Columbia—Probably showers and thunderstorms Tuesday and Wednesday.

Virginia—Showers Tuesday and probably Wednesday, except fair in southeast.

Forecasts for Special Localities.—Eastern New York, Eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware—Continued warm Tuesday, with scattered showers and thunderstorms; Wednesday, probably fair, not so warm.

Western Pennsylvania, Western New York—Scattered showers, not quite so warm, Tuesday; Wednesday fair.

Northern New England—Thunder showers Tuesday.
