There was an unusually good attendance and the president, Mrs. Keith Prevost presided and quickly disposed of the business for the afternoon.

During the special hour the guests were invited into the dining room where a dainty menu was served by the attractive hostess assisted by Mrs. W. H. Brazier, Mrs. W. J. Muldrow, Mrs. H. S. Dowling, Mrs. J. P. Trowbridge and Miss Eubank Taylor.

Death of Mrs. Fannie E. S. Heck. The news of the death of Mrs. Fannie E. S. Heck will be read with sincere regret by her host of friends throughout the South.

Mrs. Heck was president of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Southern Baptist convention and has been prominently identified with the missionary society work for years. By her splendid executive ability and deep earnestness she has been a wonderful worker. She attended the state convention in Anderson in 1913, and addressed the convention while here. Her death occurred on August 25th at her home in Raleigh, after a lingering illness of over a year. Mrs. J. D. Chapman, of Greenville, president of the South Carolina State W. M. U., attended the funeral as a representative from the state.

A traveling man was eating in a stuffy little restaurant one very hot summer day. There were no screens at the windows or the door. The proprietress herself waited on her customers and shooed flies from the table at the same time. Her energetic but vain efforts attracted the attention and also aroused the sympathy of the traveling man, who said:

"Would it not be better to have your windows and the door screened?"
"Well, yes, I agree that would help some," replied the woman after thinking a moment, "but I would look mighty lazy like."—Youth's Companion.

Of Interest To Women

FASHIONS

The new fall models of the "Country Club" suits are out, and very smart they are, made of imported English whipcord with hip length flare coat, that forms a belt in front, a convertible collar that can be worn high or low, with a detachable collar of Suede cloth; collar sleeves and trimmed with silk braid. The skirt is the new circular skirted backs, with half belt, and braid bound pockets. It is not only a delightfully sensible costume but very charming and becoming for cold days.

To know how to dress suitably is a great thing, and sad to relate very few do, except the extremely fashionable people, and it is the one thing poor as well as rich can do, if they will only use a little judgment. A truly pathetic spectacle is a woman in unsuitable garb on a rainy day, low pumps, and gussy stockings, flying skirts, too thin waists, open neck, hat tipped crazily on one side, how often do we see them, and how miserable they do look. A rainy day demands sensible dress, plain high shoes, a reasonably short skirt, a trip linen shirt waist, a rain coat buttoned trimly, and close to the neck, and either a rain cap to match the coat, or a plain tight fitting hat.

The dainty and becoming house gown has become universal for morning wear, they are so easy to make, that every woman ought to have them. You should be just as careful of your appearance at home, as when you go out, it is a decided shock to meet an elegantly gowned woman, every detail of her dress from hat to shoe absolutely correct, and in perfect taste, and to drop in at her home one morning when she does not expect callers and see her in careless dress. Often a mismatched shirt waist and skirt, no belt, or collar, and untidy hair, or in an ever elaborate, not too clean negligee and cap. The cap, by the way is a most captivating and charming thing in itself, and alluringly becoming to some faces, if worn properly, but it must be daintily fresh in lace, lawn and ribbon, and put on a daintily dressed head, a mussed, rumpled cap on a stringy mass of unkempt hair is not an edifying sight.

NEEDLECRAFT

I want to say a word about the colored embroideries that gives such a very smart look for even the plainest of dresses. A vest, collar, and cuffs of this embroidery, or a belt and long hole ends, on the dark woolen gown is particularly effective, of course, colors must blend, not fight. On a brown velvet, or broadcloth have vest, cuffs and collars worked in scroll design, in shades of golden brown. With just a hint of the peacock colors, or a dark blue, worked in gold and green, on dark red, use black, picked out with gold, if you have an eye for color, you can get most wonderful effects. The work must not be too elaborate, as it is heavy, a little of it goes a long way, but it gives an air of distinction to any costume. You will need a curved needle and heavy thread, the Bulgarian wool yarns are much used for this heavy work, and come in rich and beautiful colors, it is coarse you do not have to pad, but your stitches—it is all done in the satin stitch—must be laid very closely and evenly, be most particular in rounding a curve in the scrolls, to bungle there, ruins the whole piece. This heavy embroidery can be used very successfully on Christmas gifts, a table runner of linen crask, with a design on either side in dull blue, green and orange, makes a most acceptable present. A center piece of the same linen worked in three shades of rose, with just a tinge of brown and green, is charming.

Portfolios covered with art denim embroidered in wool, worked across two sides leaving an open space for one large initial can be used in two ways, with a strap of ribbon on each side, as a tie case, with two sheets of blotting paper, as a portfolio. They make nice gifts for men, as they can be easily carried in a suit case. In all presents made by hand let the work be well done, let them show that you put time, thought, and care in the making of them, not a hastily scrambled up last minute gift.

Pushing the Jitneys.

(From the Wall Street Journal.) Down South, where for a time until drastic regulatory ordinances spoiled the field, the jitney has been flourishing, there has been formulated a new scheme for securing capital for the jitneys.

The jitney men in a town pool their cars and incorporate a company, expecting to sell the stock to the public. They make the stock $10 a share, par value, and sell it for par with a book of jitney tickets valued at $5 thrown in. In one Southern town where a big New York utility holding company owns the street railway the jitney men came to the street railway officers and asked the officials to take a good block of the stock, on the ground that they were going to make a success of the venture and wanted the street railway to get back in the form of dividends on the jitney stock some of the receipts it would lose as a result of the jitney competition.

"Give three reasons for saying the earth is round," confronted Sandy in an examination paper.
"My teacher says it's round, the book says it's round and a man told me it was round."—Christian Register.
