GREEN HAS A SHIP

That will Plough Through the Ambient Air

WITHOUT WINGS OR RUDDER

He Says That Despite This the Machine will Get There Just the Same.

SALEM, Ill., Jan. 28.—While the Pennington airship, which attracted so much public attention the past two or three years, has ceased to be longer referred to, a recent invention of Judd Green of Salem, bids fair to accomplish that wherein Pennington failed. The invention alluded to is also an airship, and the model which was recently completed by the inventor, Mr. Green, has been viewed by many people of good judgment in such matters and some of them were most favorably impressed with the model and expressed the opinion that it would prove a success. In appearance, as well as in the manner of its operation, Mr. Green's invention differs in many respects from Pennington's. In shape it is the same, being larger in the middle, gradually tapering to each end, resembling an egg. It has no wings or other appendages which would cause unnecessary obstruction in coming in contact with the atmosphere. At one end of the ship is the propeller, at the other the rudder, by which Mr. Green believes it can be steered when in mid-air in any direction. Beneath and attached to the ship is the basket or car for passengers. Immediately beneath this and attached to the car is a disk-shaped contrivance by the operation of which the ship may be carried to any desired height. It is a screw power and is under the control of the operator, to be by him put in motion at will. It takes the place of ballast and is so adjusted that by it the ship can be made to remain stationary. Electricity will be the motive power.

Will Be a Success.

Mr. Green states that moneyed men who have examined into the merits of his invention and become satisfied that it would be a success have offered him means sufficient to perfect a complete airship. He states that there is an abundance of capital to back up his invention; but he is considering the advisability of forming a joint stock company. He is proud of his invention, as he is confident that when his complete airship shall have been built it will solve the problem of aerial navigation. Mr. Green is of an inventive turn of mind. Ever since childhood he has displayed marked taste and talent in this direction. He has, in many instances unassisted, made balloons of different sizes, as well as parachutes, and to the enjoyment of Salem's citizens sent them up. His mind is concentrated on invention, and, in a number of instances, he, without a model, has reproduced musical instruments and other works of art to demonstrate his abilities.

Will Not Give It Away.

He was a close observer of Pennington's airship. He discovered its weak points and was quick to see wherein it would fail. Then, without confiding in any one, he began work on his model several months since, and so cautiously did he proceed that he had at completed before his most intimate friends had any knowledge of what he had been engaged in doing; and although it has been seen by many of his friends, still, as yet he has not placed it on exhibition before the general public, as his patent has not yet been perfected, and until then Mr. Green prefers not to give a description of his invention himself, but has permitted a photograph of it to be taken expressly for this article. Mr. Green is a son of the late Dr. D. K. Green, surgeon in the United States army. He is at present city marshal of Salem, to which position he was elected last spring. He has a wife, but no children; is always jolly and sociable, full of antics and a general lover of sports. Besides other relatives, Mrs. Captain J. S. Jackson of Chicago, is his sister.

THE LEAFSTICKER.

One of the Quaintest Representatives of the Frog Family.

One of the most beautiful of all the tree-frogs is the leafsticker of South America, a little animal of hardly the size of our common green tree-frog, with slender body and abruptly shortened head. The color of the upper part of the body is a handsome reddish brown, bordered at each side with a yellowish white band, sometimes of a silvery luster. Beginning at the eye, it extends along the sides and ends in a sharp angle near the hind legs, where, as well as at the eyes, the stripes unite into a triangular spot. The legs are striped on the outer side for their whole length in a similar manner; at the under side they are simply yellowish white. According to measurements made by the prince of Wied, the whole length of this pleasant little creature does not exceed two centimeters. The leafsticker is common in Guayana and Brazil, where it seeks its abode in the crowns of large trees. Of its habits little is known, but, no doubt, they are similar to our tree-frogs. The little animal is especially remarkable on account of its beautiful coloring and the smallness of the body.

TYPEWRITTEN LETTERS.

Writing Love Letters on the Machine Is Tempting Providence.

If there is anything more coldly uncharacteristic than a typewritten letter, please tell me what it is, says a woman correspondent of the New York Press. The little turns and twists that we look for at the end of certain words have a degree of individuality about them that brings the writer before one's eyes. Sometimes the written lines run up the page and sometimes they straggle down, but they always follow and illustrate the bent of writer's mind, and if one has to puzzle awhile over an illegible word or two it only makes the pleasure of reading the letter last longer. Who living ever tied up a bundle of typewritten letters with a blue ribbon and treasured them for years? And not the most blindly adoring girl ever filled her ribbon drawer with missives clicked off on the noisy little machine. Howells says: "The man of the future will not know how to write; he will typewrite." If that be true, the woman of the future won't keep his letters.

ONE EQUALS NINE.

"I tell you sir," said Snaddleberry, "I've counted 'em and there only ten great liars in this country."

"Ah!" said Cynicus. "Yourself and—who is the other?"

An Illinois farmer named one of his hands Keeley Motor because it was so hard to make him work. He thought this was very funny until he got tired and discharged the man and found that he wouldn't go and couldn't be made to go. There is more in a name after all than most people think.

The beggar was a reckless wight—
Perhaps it was his fate.
I handed him a nickel bright,
For to relieve his hungry plight:
He sought the nearest slot in sight
And straightway tried his weight.
