PARIS'S FAVORITE DENTIST.

Proof of Sharp in Pennsylvania to the Court of France—Evans's Luck.

From the Cincinnati Leader.

Charles Howard, the millionaire of Vermont, is to leave a million dollars to his niece, Mrs. Evans, the wife of the rich Parisian dentist. Evans is already several times a millionaire, and this will be a pretty addition to his fortune, which is increasing at the rate of hundreds of thousands yearly. It is generally supposed that he made the most of his fortune in filling teeth. But this is a mistake, as the following tale will show. Evans is one of the oldest dentists in the United States, a man who was years ago connected with one of the imperial courts of Europe, will show:

"Dr. Evans," said the gentleman, "was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and he started life as a jeweller's apprentice in Lancaster, the same town in which Buchanan began life as a young lawyer. He went to Paris as a dentist in a few years.

"When did Evans become court dentist?"

"I do not know the time. He says, I understand, he was filling Eugenie's teeth when Louis Napoleon came to his office for some dental work, and that here the two met, and from that meeting afterward sprang their marriage. Napoleon owed much to Evans in many ways. You know he saved the life of Eugenie one night as she left the Grand Opera House, and an attempt was made to assassinate Napoleon by throwing hand grenades. He afterward aided Eugenie in escaping to England, and went with her in 1870. At this time every one else had deserted the Empress, and she fled to Dr. Evans's house. The Doctor's wife was at the sea shore, and Eugenie, dressed in Mrs. Evans's clothing, was passed off by Evans as his wife, and driven in his own carriage to the Norman coast. Thence they got a boat to England.

"Dr. Evans," this gentleman went on, "is worth several millions, and he has a grand palace in Paris. His office practice in the Rue de la Paix nets him probably $60,000 a year, but this is not how he has made the most of his money. When Napoleon was President of the Republic he was quite poor. He died very wealthy, and much of his money was made through Evans. Napoleon knew what action was going to be taken on public matters, and he also knew how this would affect stocks. If he could use his information in buying and selling he could make large sums easily. But it would not do for Napoleon to be connected with a broker. There must be some trusty go-between, added to a safe banker. Evans, I am told by good authority, was the go-between, and his position as dentist enabled him to do it to the best advantage. He had access to Napoleon at all hours, and he was the only one who could take precedence over the Cabinet and every one else. He attended him at his toilet at 8 o'clock in the morning, and was on as close terms with Eugenie as with Louis Napoleon.

"One day Eugenie said to him: 'Dr. Evans, at 11 o'clock to-morrow an order will be issued withdrawing the French troops from Rome.' Evans at once went to the broker and invested in certain securities which he knew would be affected. At 12 the next day, after the order was issued, these securities went up like a shot, and Evans made $60,000. Of course, Eugenie came in for her share of her pin money."

Giving the Young Man a Hint.

From the Detroit Free Press.

Young Spoonogle never knows when to leave when he calls on a young lady; he likes the sound of his own voice so well that he talks on and on, while the poor girl grows light-headed with the tax on her strength, and wishes the mantelpiece of Elijah would fall on the tiresome caller.

There is a young lady on Lafayette avenue who made up her mind to give Spoonogle a lesson. So, last Sunday night, when he called, she was as cordial as possible up till 9 o'clock. Then, having had a four-volume history of Spoonogle's life, with an extended account of his influence in politics and business, she began to get dizzy and have a ringing in her ears. At that moment her young brother ran into the room and said hurriedly:

"Pa wants the morning papers, sis!"

"Look in the vestibule, Willie," she answered gently. "I think I heard the boy leaving them some hours ago."

Spoonogle never took the hint, but drawled on about the roller skating rink, and what a figure he cut on skates. The next interruption was from the head of the house, who entered slowly, rubbing his bald pate.

"Good morning—good morning," he said cheerily. "Hat Spoonogle, you're out early. Well, 'early bird,' eh. I'm going to be a fine day, from present appearances."

Spoonogle was dazed, but he concluded the old man had been drinking, and sat back with a "come one, come all, this rock shall fly from its firm base as soon as yours truly" air that was decided and convincing.

A half hour passed, and the mother hurried in.

"Dear me, I'm late," she said, as she entered. "I smelled the coffee an hour ago and knew breakfast was waiting, but—oh! Good morning, Mr. Spoonogle!"

Then the sweet youth took the hint and drawing himself together he got out into the hall and opened the front door just as the hired girl rang a bell and the small boy yelled "Breakfast" over the balustrade.

How a Southerner Asks You to Drink.

From the Detroit Free Press.

I don't say that a true Southerner would be mortally offended if you refused to drink with him, yet when he invites you somehow feel that the invitation comes fresh from his heart, and you feel mean not to accept. Don't imagine that he walks around hunting for somebody to swallow liquid in chorus with him. His invitation comes from the heart every time with him and had a chat on old times and future prospects. He is shy of you at first. You can feel that he is sounding you and trying to make an estimate of whether you will do to tie to. By and by he warms up and does two-thirds of the talking. Further on he pitches his chair alongside of you. Then he grows more confidential, and first you know he has taper yarn on your leg with his finger to emphasize his remarks. An invitation to drink is not far off. I have watched it in 100 cases, and I never knew it to fail once.

"Yes, sir," he says—"yes, sir, I was in that very fight you speak of, and my brigade was on our left flank. I tell you, it was hot. Now, Yank, you were down behind a ridge, and it seemed as if every one of you had a steady shooter. Along about four—. Say, let's have something."

But I started out to tell you how a Southern man drinks. Almost invariably he takes a straight whiskey. Your beer is waiting while he pours out his hair lifter. He raises his glass, surveys the contents for five seconds, and then with a nod and a mumble, in which you catch the word luck, he seems to throw the whiskey down his throat in a lump. He never stops to taste, nor smack, nor dilute, but down it goes as if he hadn't a minute to spare, and you are left with two-thirds of a glass of beer in your hand. He'll settle the score, wipe off his mouth, wipe up his table or chair, take a sip of coffee, and ensuit his watch before the last of your glass is gone, and you can't help but feel that you are trespassing upon his valuable time.

Pigeon Shooting in England.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

A meeting of "lovers of pigeon shooting" at Sheffield was held on the 19th instant, Mr. Charles Green, recently, to oppose Mr. Anderson's bill, which has for its object the abolition of shooting all birds liberated from traps. There was only a small attendance. It was resolved that a memorial should be sent to Mr. Wortley, M. P., heartily thanking him for his "able defence of legitimate pigeon shooting." A Mr. Gale stated that he wrote to Mr. Mundella, M. P., asking him to oppose the bill, and giving among other "powerful reasons" the injury that would be done to local trade in such branches as the powder flask makers, the cartridge implement makers, and the file makers. Mr. Mundella replied that the Home Secretary had decided to give the bill his support, and it would be impossible for him to oppose it without being "a traitor to himself" (he added), it has sufficient opposition from private members to prevent it making much progress. Resolutions were passed opposing the bill on the ground that it would "deprive the workingmen of his sport while leaving the rich man in the full enjoyment of his shooting;" and that it would "cause a great stagnation in several of the local trades, which are already in a state of great depression." Another resolution expressed regret at Mr. Mundella having promised to support the bill.

The Largest Schooner Afloat.

From the Boston Herald, March 27.

Saturday next there will be launched at North Weymouth the largest schooner ever built. The dimensions of the craft are as follows: Length on keel, 196 feet 6 inches; on deck, 232 feet; width, 40 feet 10 inches; depth, 18 feet 6 inches. The frame is of the best of Connecticut white oak, and is cut together in the best and most approved manner. She is double four-timbered throughout. The keel is a double one, the keel square, carrying a 3-inch shoe. The planking outside is of selected hard pine 4 to 5 inches thick. The vessel is copper fastened throughout, and bronzed both in the most thorough and workmanlike manner. She will carry an engine to work the pumps and capstan, and boat well and cargo. She will be rigged with four masts, and will pay between 600 and 700 tons, carrying cotton. The name of the vessel will be Haroldine, after the daughter of Harold Peck of Chicago. The carrying capacity will be 2,200 tons.
