DUELLING ON THE CONTINENT.

The Deadly Mode of Fighting which Prevails in Russia.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

Over 5,000 duels occur annually in France alone. The enormous majority of these encounters take place between private soldiers. In every French regiment are to be found two or three first-rate swordsmen, commonly called des tireurs, whose especial business it is to test the nerve of any recruit suspected of a deficiency of physical courage. On the most frivolous pretext the tireur fastens a quarrel on the unfortunate novice, and the unanimous voice of the regiment declares that honor demands bloodshed. The encounter takes place in the presence of four non-commissioned officers and of the regimental fencing master, who stands by, sword in hand, ready to parry any too dangerous thrust. The weapon used in the cavalry is the sabre, and in the infantry the ordinary sword bayonet, and the issue is generally harmless enough, although cases have been known of the tireur himself coming to grief through the recruit going for his adversary.

In society, and especially among gentlemen connected with what the French term la petite presse, a very similar rule prevails, but with one important modification. The tireur is here conspicuous by his absence, and the young aspirant to social or journalistic honors is expected to faire ses armes by deliberately picking a quarrel with some eligible opponent. The weapon used in these affairs of honor is almost invariably the small sword, the pistol being considered far too dangerous an arm—the issue of these encounters is as a rule a scratched finger or forearm. Occasionally, when political or other considerations render even a scratch undesirable, pistols are resorted to, but with peculiar precautions. Thus MM. Gambetta and De Fourtou—the former being one-eyed and the latter nearly blind—were put up in a dense fog at forty paces to exchange shots with very short-barrelled smooth-bore pistols. In short, nine out of ten French duels may be looked upon as mere farces, played for the amusement of the gallery. The excellent health enjoyed by MM. Rochefort, De Cassagnac, and Carlo des Parrières, whom among them have been out over fifty times, adds strong confirmation to this view of the matter.

In both Italy and Spain duels are frequent; but in both countries the sabre is used, to the almost complete exclusion of the small sword. Indeed, the prejudice against the latter arm is so strong in Italy that it is all but impossible for 5 seconds which will consent to act in a duel of 'cavaliere'. The natural result is that while a fatal issue is rare, the ugly gashes in the face are very common. In both these countries the penalty for duelling, as in France, is merely nominal.

Throughout Germany, including Prussia, Austria, and the minor States, a very different rule prevails. With the exception of the oft-described "Schläger" duels among university students, which are still winked at, encounters between civilians are punished with considerable severity, the ordeal of single combat being a privilege practically reserved for the army. In the event of two officers falling out, a court of honor (Ehrengericht), generally composed of five superior officers and presided over by the Colonel of their regiment or the General commanding the district, carefully investigates the whole affair and decides whether an apology shall be tendered and accepted or whether an encounter is necessary. The decision of the court is final, and any officer refusing to comply with it would be compelled to retire from the service, while any duel unauthorized by the court would infallibly lead to the cashiering of the offenders. Pistols are almost invariably used, at a distance of twelve paces; and, German officers being as a rule very good shots, fatal consequences are not infrequent. By a strange anomaly, the verdict of the Ehrengericht does not entirely cover the responsibility of the combatants. In the event of a fatal issue, the survivor is liable to suffer a term of open arrest in a fortress, varying from two to six months. A German officer thus finds himself placed in the dilemma of refusing to fight and being compelled to retire, or of fighting and running the risk of being placed under arrest for doing so.

In no country are duels more frequent or more murderous than in Russia; the Russians being, especially when in their cups, as quarrelsome among themselves as they are proverbially courteous to foreigners. The mode of combat universally adopted is that termed the duel à la barrière; the opponents being put up at fifteen paces, with liberty to advance five paces each at a given signal, and to fire at will. Should one of them fire and miss, his adversary is entitled to compel the five paces before returning the shot. Many cases have been known in which the last, although mortally wounded, has yet retained sufficient strength to take steady aim and fire with fatal effect. The great Russian poet Pushkin was killed in a duel à la barrière, after severely wounding his antagonist.

In the Baltic provinces a system prevails which at first sight appears even more murderous. The adversaries are placed only three paces apart; the pistols are held with the muzzle pointing upward, and are brought down and discharged at a given signal. It may appear almost impossible for two men to miss each other at so short a distance; but this is not the case. Each of the opponents is so desperately anxious to gain the least fraction of a second on his adversary that, on the signal being given, the weapons are often brought down with so hurried and violent a jerk that the bullets bury themselves in the ground. At a duel fought last year at Riga between an officer and a student in this fashion, three shots were exchanged without any result, while at the fourth discharge the student had the great toe of his right foot cut clean off by his opponent's bullet.

New and Old Style Teakettles.

As a man threw the last of a lot of bright new teakettles on to a big truck in Beekman street, he said in answer to a question:

"They are galvanized iron. They are not a new invention, but they are just now getting into common use. They are handsome; there is no paint to burn off with a disagreeable smell when they are first used, and the insoluble sediment does not go for ever into the inner surface. They would wholly replace the old iron ones at once, only they cost from 15 to 25 cents more, according to size, and some people will buy the lowest priced article without regard to quality."

SATURDAY, Nov. 15.

To-day's stock market has been precisely the reverse of yesterday's. The transactions were less than half as large, and the declines were general and averaged about the same as the net advances made on Friday. The opening was quiet at prices that were, as a rule, below the final figures of yesterday. The pressure to sell continued through the day, and was most pronounced in the Vanderbilt and Granger stocks, especially New York Central and St. Paul. At the lower range of prices the market became very dull, and so closed, with prices slightly above the lowest of the day.

Closing prices compare with those of yesterday as follows:
