

Reliable Laxative Relieved This Baby

Child was Badly Constipated
Until Mother Tried
Simple Remedy.

WOODROW WILSON

In spite of every care and attention to diet, children are very apt to become constipated, a condition responsible for many ills after life unless promptly relieved.

Mrs. C. W. Wilson, of Shelbyville, Tenn., had trouble with her baby boy, Woodrow, until she heard of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. She writes: "I can safely say Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the best remedy of its kind on earth. It acts so gently and yet so surely. Little Woodrow was very badly constipated and we could find nothing that gave relief until we tried your Syrup Pepsin, which gave immediate relief."

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a compound of simple laxative herbs, free from opiates or narcotic drugs, mild in action, positive in effect and pleasant to the taste. It has been prescribed by Dr. Caldwell for more than a quarter of a century and can now be had for fifty cents a bottle in any well-stocked drug store. A trial bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can be obtained, free of charge by writing to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 461 Washington St., Monticello, Illinois.

JAP EMPEROR GOES TO KIOTO FOR CORONATION

Tokio, Nov. 6.—Yoshihito, Emperor of Japan and 122nd head of the Japanese imperial house after the first emperor Jimmu whose reign began 2575 years ago, left Tokio today for Kioto to make his state entry into the capital of his forefathers and there formally accede to the throne of the empire of the Rising Sun. The monarch was to have been accompanied by Empress Sadako, but the nearness of the period when Her Majesty is expected to give birth to another heir prevented her from participating in the ceremonies.

The imperial carriage was preceded to the railroad station by the "Kashikodokoro" or Divine Mirror, which represents the spirit of the grand imperial ancestress or Sun Goddess, Amaterasu Omikami, and was accompanied by the two other sacred treasures which symbolize the sanctity and power of the throne of Nippon, the sacred sword and the sacred jewel, sometimes known as the necklaces of pearl-like gems with the magnificent curve, which have been handed down from emperor to emperor through untold generations.

The whole city of Tokio is in joyous fete unexampled in Japanese history since the triumphant entry of Emperor Mutsuhito nearly fifty years ago. Hundreds of thousands of people are here from the provinces, most of them to remain until the great celebration in Tokio at the end of the month when the emperor returns from Kioto. Special flags and paper lanterns are suspended over every door to mark the inauguration of the happy coronation period. Streets, parks and public buildings are decorated with festal flag and banner. The tramcars wear garlands. From the noble to the rickshaman the dominating note is joy and gladness.

Prior to the departure of the imperial cortege a solemn religious ceremony was performed at the imperial sanctuary in the palace.

At the appointed time in the early morning the hall wherein is enshrined the imperial sanctuary was decorated by court ritualists in a manner appropriate to the occasion. This being finished, His Imperial Highness Prince Higashi Fushimi, chief commissioner, and other members of the coronation board, all in ceremonious Japanese dress, took their seats.

The doors of the sanctuary were opened amid Shinto music, and after offerings were made before the altar Prince Iwakura, the chief ritualist, read a religious address or prayer announcing to the spirit-son of the imperial grand ancestress, Amaterasu Omikami, the commencement of the auspicious coronation ceremonial and the transfer of the imperial sanctuary and court to Kioto for the celebration of the event. Then a chamberlain and a maid-of-honor both in ancient court robe and respectively representing the emperor and empress, proceeded before the presence of the holy of holies and made obeisance on behalf of their majesties.

The ceremony having closed with solemn chords of music, the holy of holies, which is the sacred mirror, was slowly borne outside the palace to be taken to Kioto, together with the sacred sword and gem. The sacred treasures, which are the emblem of the throne, being held in the deepest veneration and respect, their departure from the capital was celebrated in a most august and dignified manner.

The "kashikodokoro" was transferred in this way: An ancient palanquin, which is called the Fenberry Wheels of Heaven, was brought to the southern porch of the imperial sanctuary, and the sacred mirror was placed therein. Then the palanquin was slowly borne to the station on the shoulders of villagers from a suburb of Kioto—a village to which this honor has fallen from time immemorial. They wore the ancient kimono costume of the sanctuary guards.

As the royal cortege left the palace the thunder of saluting guns from the public parks informed the multitudes of the metropolis, and that was the signal for silent prayer for the joyful departure of the emperor for his beneficent accession and his safe return to the capital. For all to witness the royal departure was physically. Thousands had arrived along the line of progress last night to await patiently throughout the long hours. The great majority who were unable to find places will be able to witness the royal cortege when the emperor is officially greeted by the city of Tokio.

The emperor rode to the railway station in a coach of regal magnificence through lines of picked troops from the household guard.

The procession from palace to station moved slowly by a somewhat circuitous route, so that it might be viewed by as many people and especially by as many good children as possible. First rode mounted police inspectors, then cavalry of the imperial guard in their new glittering coronation uniform. Next came the imperial ancestral shrine, which was borne on the shoulders of villagers from Kioto and which was guarded by the imperial ritualists and high officers of the imperial guard.

Then came the emperor in his coach drawn by six horses with positions. Finally came a squadron of cavalry of the imperial guard and more mounted police officials. Like all other imperial carriages which formed the retinue, the royal coach was especially built for use during the accession at Tokio and Kioto. It is in the general form and lines of a ship. The color scheme was consisted on the exterior, while the interior was lined with white brocade, upon which the imperial chrysanthemum crest was woven. Both sides of the coach bore the imperial crest embossed in gold. The emperor was able to look from the carriage through thick glass panes from which white brocade curtains were artistically draped. The coach was surmounted by a golden image of a phoenix, the mystical bird of ancient China, whose presence symbolizes a wise sovereign. It was drawn by six steeds which for months had been trained in the imperial stables so that they might perform their historic service nobly and without accident. The axes, screws, leathers and other appurtenances were especially made in Great Britain and France.

The carriages for the court dignitaries numbered 15 in all, and were each drawn by two horses. These coaches were similar in construction to the imperial coach, the chief difference being the absence of the symbolic phoenix, the imperial crest and the curtains of white brocade. Other carriages in the courtly procession had also been especially constructed, and, while less gorgeous than the imperial coach, were of beautiful workmanship and with the royal coach formed a rare and stately retinue.

The Crown Prince, the other imperial sons, princes and princesses of the blood, princes and princesses of the imperial house had driven to the station previous to the emperor and the ministers of state, elder statesmen, peers and other dignitaries had done likewise, in order to receive his majesty and be present at his departure for Kioto.

In front of the station was a triumphal portal of green and flowers and the emperor passed through this to be received within by the distinguished company which had preceded him. After an exchange of salutations, the emperor and court passed over a carpet of beautiful tapestry especially woven for the function to the railroad train, which moved slowly from the station while cries of "banzai," "banzai" filled the station and were taken up by the great crowd outside.

The imperial railroad cars were built for the occasion at the works of railway board. The interior decoration was of cloisonne ware, textile fabrics and raised lacquer of the most exquisite quality. The cloisonne was prepared by Nagoya artists and the rest by artists from Kioto. The royal car itself was designed by Sawabe Seigoro. It is a combination of sturdy construction and exquisite and delicate workmanship and decoration. The car is divided into seven compartments, connected by a long corridor. The compartment for the use of the emperor and empress is situated in the center. It is of Japanese style of the Fujiwara era. The ceiling is composed of multitudinous tiny panels of polished teak cunningly and beautifully laid and draped with rare silk brocade. The walls are hung with rare tapestry embroidered with the imperial chrysanthemum intermingled with the mythological phoenix. Four beautiful panels depict the seasons. The floor is covered with a specially woven carpet of silk velvet.

There were two armchairs for their majesties, upholstered in especially designed brocade, one small table for the imperial seal and another upon which reposed the imperial sabre. There are two dressing rooms indicated for the emperor and his consort. The doors leading to these rooms are decorated with rich embroidery of Japanese lacquer of the most refined workmanship and skill. The walls are covered with silk tapestry, and the clasps and hinges are of gold.

The car in which reposed the imperial sanctuary has six compartments, one for the sanctuary itself, one for the soldiers of the imperial guard, one for the ladies in waiting of the court and three for the priests of the imperial household, the sanctuary compartment being in the center.

All the skill of the Japanese imperial workmen was devoted to attaining an ensemble which would above all express solemnity and sacredness. The seat of the holy shrine was built in the form of an altar, with steps leading thereto. The material of construction in this holy compartment was pure white wood, natural in color. Several other rooms for the priests were made of the same natural wood.

The dining room for the emperor and attendants was of sumptuous construction. The walls were decorated with raised flowers made of lacquer with panels of mulberry wood.

When the lacquer work for the principal royal carriage was completed last autumn the society of Tokio artists in lacquer petitioned the imperial household for the privilege of decorating the carriage set apart especially for the empress, and which by respect was drawn to Kioto today. Accordingly, Kawanano Isaya, a member of the association and a rising artist in lacquer, was honored with court orders. To do full justice to this comparison of skill between the old and new imperial capitals, Mr. Isaya chose the most gifted ten of the Tokio Academy graduates to assist him in the work, which was completed last March in his private studio.

COTTON BOLL 125 YEARS OLD PRIZED BY GREENVILLE MAN

Greenville, Nov. 5.—R. Mayes Cleveland, residing near Marlton, has in his possession several bolls of cotton that were grown 125 and 126 years ago. The cotton is in a fine state of preservation although it is slightly tinged. Mr. Cleveland is quite proud of this cotton, which clearly demonstrates the durability of the South's greatest product.

A number of the textile manufacturers who are in the city attending the Southern Textile exposition have visited Mr. Cleveland's place, and have shown great interest in the field of blooming cotton. The suggestion has been made that the visitors make a trip into the country in order to view the snowy white fields, which are most beautiful at this season of the year.

NOT AGAIN UNTIL, 1919.
Even Then a Constitutionalist Convention Might Get in the Way of the Women.

(New York Times.)
Under the most favorable circumstances the advocates of woman suffrage might contrive to bring the question, so emphatically negated at the polls yesterday, before the voters on a new referendum in 1919. Under a constitutional provision an amendment to the organic law submitted from the legislature must receive favorable action from two successive legislatures in which a different senate is sitting.

The present legislature has already once passed on woman suffrage. Should the legislature of 1917 be prevailed upon to take favorable action on a woman suffrage amendment this would have to be submitted again to the legislature of 1919, following the election of a new senate in 1918.

Even should the two prospective lawmaking bodies act favorably the suffragists would have another hurdle to negotiate. With the revised constitution defeated, the question of whether a new constitution a convention shall be called will be submitted to the voters next year. If answered in the affirmative the new constitutional convention will meet in 1921, and any action that body might take would supersede the action of the legislature.

How to Prevent Croup.
It may be a surprise to you to learn that in many cases croup can be prevented. Mrs. H. M. Johns, Elda, Ohio, relates her experience as follows: "My little boy is subject to croup. During the past winter I kept a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in the house, and when he began having that croupy cough I would give him one or two doses of it and it would break the attack. I like it better for children than any other cough medicine because children take it willingly, and it is safe and reliable." Sold by all dealers.
