HOW MUCH SHE GIVES

The Really True Sacrifice a Woman Makes

WHEN SHE GETS MARRIED

The "Marriage-Is-a-Failure" Problem Bound to Bob Up at Every Turn in Life.

A woman has asked this department to answer the following question:

"Do men realize just how much a woman gives up when she becomes a wife?"

My dear querist, a righteous answer to "these few lines" would bristle with enough phases to crowd out the major part of THE HERALD advertising space.

TOILETS RECENTLY FROM PARIS.

Yes, many men do keenly recognize that their wives sacrifice health, strength, beauty and gratification of refined tastes in order to make home comfortable and attractive. Likewise these wives delicately comprehend that their husbands are cheerfully giving energy and perseverence and indulgence of personal ease to the one pursuit of provision for the family. Each makes "the best" of limited circumstances and resources. It is a mutual sacrifice. Both are happier than if each labored for a single, selfish living, garnished with a few personal luxuries. They have plenty of care and some grief, but a comforting confidence in each other helps the to endure them "sufficient unto the day is its evil." They are contented and even happy. Together they earn the living that neither tries in a rough shod way to collect by means of matrimonial imposition, the debt which some folks say the world owes to each individual because he is living.

The unexalloyed truth is, many American wives were never so "well off" before as after marriage. They have wider and more liberties. Their domestic obligations serve as social and personal advantages.

On the other hand, there are wives who patiently make contentious atonement for the mistake committed "in accepting" the wrong sort of man. They deserve most sincere and delicate sympathy because they make no public paint against the better or worse business in which they "unhappily engaged." They heal conjugal differences with closed door.

Also it cannot be denied that many husbands are tolerably well geared with the domestic curb bit and that their wives tactfully or masterfully handle the reins.

The average American woman is ambitious. This must be accepted as a certainty by the man who marries her. As his wife, she will feel ashamed and even outraged if he show no desire and make no effort "to be somebody and something." Perhaps this ambition has something to do with the tendency of the American wife to consider herself a martyr under circumstances not of the abusive kind.

Certainly it isn't politic for a woman to ungraciously suggest to her husband what she might have been if she had become some other man's wife. That is, it isn't best to indulge in that sort of portrayal unless she wants to stir up a conjugal squabble.

That kind of thing is warranted never to fail as kindling material for matrimonial conflagrations.

She should know that her husband might try to show up what he might have been had he married some other woman or the other man's wife.

You see, my dear woman, your question very much touches the "marriage-failure" question, which really depends, pro and con, when carried into practical effect, upon the contracting parties.

Lady Aberdeen's Good Work.

Lady Aberdeen has become well known this side the Atlantic, "in print," on account of her active interest in the collection of laces for the exhibit at the world's fair. Recently she went to Dublin to attend a meeting of the Irish Industries' association, of which she is president. After the session she visited various establishments in the city and inspected numerous exhibits in course of preparation for the Columbian exhibition. She was particularly interested in the fac-similes of the Irish antiquities, lent by the Royal Irish academy. This collection includes the magnificent jewels known as the "Great Clare Find," "The Crong of Cong," and the "Tara Brooch."

Lady Aberdeen and party made a round of the industrial centers, at which places much beautiful lace is being made. She visited the Bath, Shirley, and Dundalk schools, receiving public welcome made up of music by brass bands and speeches by town and school officials.

Lady Aberdeen also visited Belfast, where she examined the exhibits Messrs. Robertson, Ledlie, Ferguson & Co. are preparing for the world's fair. She was especially pleased with the exquisitely fine linens, which are hand woven and hand embroidered. She made particular inquiries concerning the scale of wages and gave large orders at the several establishments which will encourage cottage industries by giving employment to many women.

ANNA OF AUSTRIA COLLAR.

The association of which Lady Aberdeen is chief officer has paid over $25,000 to workers during the past year. Its committees sum up many improvements in industrial system and productions.—Chicago Mail.

Lamp Shades.

Lamps are considered leading form for lighting up parlors and libraries. Every lamp must be finished with a pretty shade. The only globe that is recognized by fashion is that of tulip shape in colored or veined glass.

These pretty shades may be made at home, but the most extreme care must be taken that the work is daintily planned, executed and finished. Every defect is vividly displayed when the lamp is lighted. No shade is preferable to one that is badly made. The popular wire frame is the pagoda form, with upturned corners. Yellow, amber, pink, pale green and lavender are leading colors in silk coverings, which should be of good quality. The flutes and pleats must be arranged before placing the cover on the frame. Frills should be finished before tacking them to the border. Do not use common lace and flimsy ribbon.

Shades made of silk and fringe are more easily suited to the style and coloring of a room than those covered and trimmed with lace. A pretty style of fringe is that made of pieces or loops of ribbon, not more than half an inch wide, each end of the loop having a bead attached.

In a Japanese room positive hues should predominate. The lamp shades may be of India silk or crepon trimmed with rows of fancy braid or narrow gold lace. Glass beads in colors may also be used with good effect.

Circular shades are often used for very large lamps and are pretty hand painted and finished with fringe.
