Wit and Humor.

"A little nonsense now and then,
Is relished by the best of men."

My Early Love.

It was an ardent boyish love,
That faded out as life grew older
My heart flew to her lilac dove,
And lighted on her beauteous shoulder,
Or sipped the honey of her lips,
Or in her eyes found heavenly graces.
I loved her to her finger tips—
I loved her very foot-print traces,
Her features wore a rapturous charm,
Her smile made all within me flutter,
In rounded beauty was her arm,
Her little hand was fat as butter.
No wonder that I loved her so,
But she was false as she was pretty,
And soon she cracked her little beau,
And took a big one from the city.
I caught him out one gloomy night—
'Twas one of love's extremest phases,
I aggravated him to fight,
But oh, he larruped me like blazes!

Taking Toll.

Doctor Mordecai Mellows complains that we have done him a great wrong: First by 'taking away his good name,' and substituting therefor that of 'Meadows,' in narrating the incident where somebody 'took toll' of the Widow Lambkin; and secondly, by insinuating that the Widow L. subsequently became Mrs. Doctor M. To place the matter in its true light he sends us his own autobiography, as originally published in the 'St. Louis Reveille. From this we give the true denouement of the affair between the Doctor and the Widow.

A few evenings after the memorable sleigh-ride they were sitting side by side in the Widow's snug parlor. They had discussed neighborhood affairs, flowers, moonlight, and all the ordinary topics, when a deep pause ensued, which was broken by the Widow Lambkin's voice, who appeared to be thinking aloud:

'Mellows' is such a pretty name!—Oh, my! I almost said something, didn't I?'

'Yes,' replied the Doctor, 'I think it is prettier than some other names.'

'Oh, Doctor 'Mellows!'

'But still,' says the phyllosophic physician, 'I didn't propose to annihilate the name of Lambkin.'

At parting the Widow murmured, 'We have enemies here. We have indeed.'

'Ah, is it possible?' rejoined the Doctor who thought that the 'We' sounded very pretty, but still the name of Lambkin was unmentioned.

The next day the Widow was informed by a sick relative who resided near her own residence, which was at Littleton, 'The Doctor was at the door to bid her good-by.

'Yes 'may,' as we shn'n't see each ther for a long while,' she whispered.

'May what?'

'Take a little call at parting.'

'And he came,' she added, after tell was taken enough for a long bridge with a great many arches, 'he came to address your letters to 'Marrd' Littleton. They may be intercepted if sent to Littleton.'

The driver's horn sounded, the steps descended, the Doctor handed the Widow into the vehicle, and heard the lady as her in she was whirled around the corner. 'But,' considers the Doctor, 'as Widow's spelling of writing, and as it wasn't long until the letters were never intercepted. Long life to the Widow 'Lambkin.' May she multiplied and multiply. Widows, after all.'
