NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A COMPANION TO DAVID COPPERFIELD.—MERVYN Clitheroe.—By W. Harrison Ainsworth, author of "Windsor Castle," etc. Notices of the English press.

Mr. Ainsworth has established for himself a very high reputation as a novelist, and his works are always sure to be marked by excellencies sufficient to demand for them a great deal of attention and popularity. To judge from the opening portion of this new story before us, the author seems to be laying the groundwork of a good plot, and to be displaying skill in the disposition of his materials.—Weekly Times.

The author of "Rookwood," whose fame is of long standing as a powerful romancist, has once more entered the field. The commencement of his new story promises something of a different character to his former productions. The form chosen is the autobiographical, and is adopted with ease and spirit. There are passages of humor in the first few pages, which we were little prepared to expect, considering the antecedents of the author. No doubt the publication will be highly successful'—Bath Journal.

The prolific pen of Mr. Ainsworth is about to furnish the world with a new tale, and, if we may judge from his commencement, it promises to be of great interest.—Glasgow Examiner.

The Bunker's Hill hero, who kept the shop near the school, is a well sketched character.—Literary Gazette.

Nothing can be more promising than the boyhood of Mr. Ainsworth's hero—as far as we have been allowed to pry into his history. Let him keep the pace up, and "Mervyn Clitheroe" will be not only his chef d'œuvre, but one of the most popular fictions of its day. The illustrations by Phiz are characteristic and well executed; and the quantity of letter press is greater than such livraisons usually contain. There are books, of which this would be esteemed a doubtful recommendation; but where the quality is so good and sterling, the more we get of it the greater value do we receive for our money.—Dublin Evening Mail.
