Coroner's Inquests.

MELANCHOLY SUICIDE OF AN ARTIST.

Nathaniel W. Hutchings, a daguerreotype artist boarding with Michael Pettel, 119 Christie street, was found yesterday morning, about seven o'clock, dead in his bed, by another boarder who formerly shared a room with him. An alarm was given, and on examination it was found that deceased had stabbed himself in several places with a dirk, which lay on a segar box near the bed. Coroner Wilhelm held an inquest upon his remains. It was shown in evidence that deceased was in a consumption and had become much emaciated by the disease, and had been heard to express a desire that he was dead; but had not been heard to say that he would destroy himself. Dr. Blumenthal made an examination of the body, and found two wounds on the left side of the chest, made with a dirk knife, one being between the fourth and fifth ribs, and the other to have penetrated deeply within the cavity of the chest; a wound was also found between the fifth and sixth ribs, and other stabs of a lighter character. It is, in the absence of evidence, supposed the act was induced by lowness of spirits. The jury returned the following verdict: "That the deceased came to his death by suicide, by stabbing himself whilst in a state of depression of mind." He was thirty years of age, and a native of New York.

COURT CALENDAR—THIS DAY.

COMMON PLEAS.—Nos. 122, 280, 286 to 297.

History of Trinity Church, in a Petition from a Descendant of a Revolutionary Officer.

TO THE HONORABLE THE COMMON COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK:—

The undersigned respectfully joins in the prayer of many of his fellow citizens to your honorable body, asking for the repeal of the ordinance of the late Common Council relative to the extension of Albany street through Trinity Church yard.

In support of his petition, the undersigned begs leave to present the following facts connected with our Revolutionary history.

Among the earliest of the patriotic spirits who marched from their homes to defend the city of New York against the armies of Great Britain in 1776, were the regiments contributed by the counties of York and Lancaster, in Pennsylvania. They were composed almost entirely of young men, the majority of them of German descent and animated by that hatred of oppression and enthusiasm in the cause of freedom, which distinguish their race at the present day.

Five regiments marched from the county of York to New Jersey in July, 1776 and of these, two were detached to form part of the flying camp "—a corps of 10,000 men, voted by Congress on June 3, 1776. These two regiments were stationed in the vicinity of the City of New York. A portion of them were killed or taken prisoners at the battle of Brooklyn Heights, and the balance either fell on the field of battle at the taking of Fort Washington on the 16th of November, 1776, or were captured on that disastrous occasion, and marched down to the city. Here they, in common with thousands of their fellow patriots, suffered unheard of cruelties in the prisons and sugar houses of New York.

The regiment of Col. Michael Swope, consisting of eight companies, suffered severely at Fort Washington. Death on the field, or by wounds, or from the horrors of the prisons, left but few to return to the green hills of the Codorus.

Ensign and Adjutant Barnitz of this regiment then but eighteen years old, fell at Fort Washington, with a musket ball in each leg. Being carried to the city prisons with the survivors of his fellow regiment, he was soon afterwards removed to more comfortable quarters in the old house formerly standing at No. 9 Bowery, in consequence of the severity of his wounds, and at the intercession of an old family friend—Major General William Alexander, Lord Stirling, who was then also a prisoner, having been shortly before captured on Long Island. Adjutant Barnitz here lay with unhealed wounds for five months, but during that time he was not based like to the still greater sufferings of his companions in arms, and with the help of the noble hearted officer just mentioned, he was enabled to alleviate their captivity and to care for their remains when dead.

Being generally of the Lutheran faith, the graveyard of that denomination, adjoining Trinity Church, (subsequently also called Grace Church,) was the place selected for the place of burial, but the church had been destroyed in the conflagration which occurred shortly after the occupation of the city by the British army, and the burial ground was unprotected.

A successful effort was therefore made to obtain a place of sepulture in Trinity Churchyard. Adjutant Barnitz was attached to Captain Christian Stake's company of Swope's regiment, composed of young men of the best families of the town of York. To these more particularly, as being his more immediate comrades, such care as he could afford was given.

Of this company the following were buried in the northwestern portion of the grounds, at that time bordering on the water, viz:—Sergeant Peter Lask, sergeant John Hicks; privates Hugh Dobbins, Henry Hoff, David Parker, and probably one or two others. Captain M'Carter (or Col. Richard M'Allister's regiment, from the same county,) died of wounds received at Fort Washington, and was also buried at Trinity yard.

It may be proper to state that these facts are derived partly from the History of the County of York, by A. J. Glossbrenner, Esq., (now sergeant at arms of the Senate of the United States,) and partly from the papers and reminiscences of the old veteran who, in the early days of the writer, was wont to relate the story of his battles, and "to shoulder his staff and show how field were won."

To the soldier, the last resting place of his comrade is consecrated by the memory of the trials, the conflicts, the sacrifices, and the sufferings which they have shoulder to shoulder encountered. His honor requires that it be kept by that mound of earth, and must guard it from violation while life shall last. He bequeaths its care to his countrymen, as a place of sacred memories, and never for a moment dreams that future years may bring spoilers of the tomb, who will forget their duty to the blood which cemented the foundations of the republic.

The Mexican war was prolific in instances where those who fell were entombed by committees sent by their surviving comrades, and received a soldier's burial at home.

Permit me to relate a fact in this connection.

At the call for volunteers for the Mexican war, William Eurich marched with his company from the town of York, and joined the Pennsylvania regiment. In the battle which occurred before the walls of Puebla, Eurich, with other of his company having charged close up to the Mexican line, saw his friend and comrade shot dead by his side. A sunnier force compelled them to retreat, but Eurich paused, and shouldering his friend's body was bearing it off to a place of safe sepulture, when a ball struck him, and the brave fellow sank in death by the body of his much loved friend. Eurich was the grandson of Michael Eurich, one of the captured soldiers of Fort Washington.

Shall the stern heart and rough nature of a soldier beat with so hallowed a feeling and shall the citizen, the merchant, and the legislator repudiate it?

Shall it be said that the city of New York desecrates the graves of her defenders, and, at the bidding of the money god, scatters to the winds the ashes of the soldiers of liberty?

These patriot soldiers, who now repose in the churchyard of Trinity, died far from friends and home. They laid down their lives in their youth. They left no sons to speak for them. Their silent dust cannot plead to you for rest.

It therefore becomes my duty and privilege to address you.

I was born where they were born. Their friends were my friends, and my early days were familiar with the green hills which they last looked upon when they marched to defend your city.

My earnest petition to the Common Council of the city of New York is, that the remains of these martyrs of our Independence may be left in peace in the graves where their comrades laid them. Respectfully, J. BARNITZ SACON.
