The Bells.

I do not think I've did full justice to the subject in his poem of "The Bells." I should add two verses, after this style:

I.

Hear the ringing of the bell!
Ding! ding!
What a world of misery its harsh sound doth foretell!
How it clatters—clatters—clatters, on the icy air of morn
Till all pleasant dreams it scatters,—wakes us up to thoughts forlorn!
Though 'tis far from our desire,
We must rise to light the fire,
While we shiver—shiver—shiver,—
And the stars and moon are quiver,
And the stars and moon, still bright,
Seem to gaze at us and quiver in a comical delight,
As we grumble, as we struggle, and we tumble out of bed,
As we pour forth ice-cold water, and bathe therewith our head,—
While we listen to the ringing
Of the bells—bell—bell,—
As we listen to the ringing
Of that doubtful go-up bell!

II.

Hear the merry breakfast bell!
Cheerful bell!
It brings us thoughts of good things, and with it comes the smell
Of coffee, and beefsteak, and potatoes an king hot,
For the punctual early risers who are ready on the spot,—
For those who heard the rising bell, and got up in a hurry,
And did not take another nap, and then commence to skurry.
But the slothful! ah! the slothful!
Do they sit or do they doubtful,
They who half-an-hour for bate,
Four they'll find an empty plate,
How they shudder at the bell,
And it sounds to them a knell,
As they listen to its swell
With a groan!
Oh! what anguish do they feel as they listen to the peal
Of the bell—bell—bell—bell—bell!
As they hear the folks go down,—
Tramp of heels and rustling gown,—
Left alone!
Then they view their sloth with sorrow,
Vow they'll rise betimes to-morrow,
As they listen to the ringing of the bell!
To the ringing and the dinging of the bell!

Variety.

A bad habit to get into—A coat that is not paid for.

When a man is at death's door he is apt to step out.

Half a million dollars will make a pug nose beautiful.

We know all about shooting stars, but we often forget that this world of ours is a revolver.

In Cairo they have named their champion base-ball club the Qui Nine.

Why was the cleansing of the Augean stables like a piece of ancient Mexican potterware? Because it was an Aztec kind of job.

"You haven't opened your mouth during the whole session," said an M. P. to a fellow-member. "Oh! yes I have," was the reply; "I yawned through the whole of your speech."

Quiz has been out after ducks and says he would a deal rather shoot at a bird on the wing than when it's still; because, in the former case, there's possibility, you know, of its flying in front of the shot.

Right in the shadow of the honest milkman, a mean-spirited cynic sits and says; "Thirteen-million milch cows in this country assist to color the water for which the average American citizen pays 8 cents a quart.

"What do you know of the character of this man?" was asked of a witness in court the other day. "I know it to be unbleachable, your honor," replied the witness with much emphasis.

"Is that a friend of yours?" asked a gentleman pointing toward a party who was sailing rapidly down the street. "Can't tell you till next Saturday," returned the individual addressed, "I've just loaned him $5."—Brooklyn Argus.

"As to opening oysters?" said Old Hurricane, "why, nothing's easier, if you only know how." "And how's how?" inquired Straight. "Scotch snuff," answered Old Hurricane, very sententiously; "Scotch Snuff; bring a little of it ever so near their noses, and they will sneeze their lids off."

The laziest man in the city resides on Green street. Himself and six others met in a saloon the other night to draw straws to see who was the laziest one. But when the Green street man was reached he refused to draw, on the ground that he was too lazy to reach out and make an effort.—Albany Post.

"Really my dear," said poor Mr. Jones to his better half, "you have sadly disappointed me. I once considered you a jewel of a woman, but you have turned out only a bit of matrimonial paste." "Then, my love," was the reply, "console yourself with the idea that paste is adhesive, and will stick to you as long as you live."

"Sleepin' Tonald?" said a Highlander to a drowsy acquaintance, who was ruminating on the grass in a horizontal position. "No, Tuncan," was the ready. "Then, Tonald, would you lend me ten shilling?" was the next question. "Ough, ough!" was the response, with a heavy snore; "I'm sleepin' noo, Tuncan, my lad."

The following letter from a young man was lately addressed to a Judge of Probate: "Sir:—My father departed this life not long hence, leaving a wife and five scorpions. He died detested, and his estate is likely to prove insolvent. I was left executioner, and being told that you were Judge of reprobates, apply to you for letters of condemnation."

"A Down-Easter, while traveling through the West, happened on one of its representative tavern-keepers, of whom he asked what could be furnished for dinner. "Anything from a snipe to an elephant," was the reply. "I will take a piece of elephant," said Down-Easter. "You will have to take a whole one," was the rejoinder; "we never cut them."

A Syrian convert to Christianity was urged by his employer to work on Sunday, but he declined. "But," said the master, "doth not your Bible say that if a man has an ox or an ass that falls into a pit on the Sabbath day he may pull him out?" "Yes," answered Hayop, "but if the ass has a habit of falling into the same pit every Sabbath day, then the man should either fill up the pit or sell that ass."

"Papa, I want a new Bunker Hill," said a girl. "A new Bunker Hill! What under the sun is that?" "Why, that's the name of the latest fall style of bonnet." "Is it eh? Why do they call it that?" "Oh, I don't know, papa." "Well, what does it cost?" "Only $50." "Oh, I see now why they call it Bunker Hill." "Why, papa?" "Because it is so high." "Oh, you, you horrid, dear papa. There."

Astride a log sat Sam and another sinner, engaged in a little game of seven-up, when a minister approached, who, after a moment's solemn contemplation of the game, laid his hand upon Samuel's shoulder, and said: "My friend, is that the way to save your soul?" "Perhaps not," answered Sam, who, having just played a card, was attentively considering his hand, "perhaps not, but it seems about the best thing I can do to save my Jack."

The other day, a Detroiter (says the Free Press) took home a book containing several anecdotes showing the power of imagination, and, after reading them to his wife, he tenderly said: "Now, Angeline, you may some day imagine that you hear me kissing the servant-girl in the other room, and you see how base it would be to accuse me of such a thing." "John Henry," she replied in a smooth voice, "if I ever imagine such a thing, you'll need a doctor within fifteen minutes, no matter what that book says."

Sinking of the Harvest Queen.

NEW YORK, January 14th.—It is determined beyond a doubt that the Harvest Queen, of the Black Ball line, was sunk by collision in the Irish Channel, and that her crew, numbering thirty men, were lost. It is further believed, from statements made by sailors of the steamer Adriatic, that it was that vessel which came in contact with the Harvest Queen. There is no mention of a collision on the log of the Adriatic, and Captain Jennings explained to the agent of the line that the collision was so slight that they did not think it worth while to say anything about it. He says it happened a little before 2 o'clock on the morning of the 31st. The Executive Officer had charge of the steamer. He saw the ship approaching in a zig zag course, so he deemed it unsafe to keep the Adriatic in her direct course. He accordingly stopped the steamer, ringing the bells to reverse the engine and sent below for me, but the ship still kept on approaching and the steamer had backed so far that the water was just about even with the hatches, when suddenly she turned about, crossing our bows, and struck her jib-boom on our anchor stock. I myself was on deck by this time, and understanding that cries for help had been heard from the water, ordered the boats to be lowered, thinking that, perhaps, some sailors had been at work on the jib at the time of the collision, and had been swept overboard. The ship itself sailed off as if nothing had happened, and after keeping the steamer hove to for about three hours, without finding anything, I ordered the bells to ring to go ahead. Subsequently I heard some talk among the men that we had sunk a vessel, but that was, of course too absurd to be listened to. The collision was of no account whatever. A seaman gives the following version: Thursday, Dec. 30th, the Adriatic left Liverpool. Friday morning, when off Moyne, the head man on the lookout sighted a vessel on the starboard tack gave the alarm and the steamer changed her course. About ten minutes passed and the lookout gave the alarm again, for the vessels were closing fast upon each other. It was a starry night. A moment passed, and then the Adriatic dashed into the bow of the stranger. The engine was reversed and the steamer backed a mile or two. The boats were lowered and as they rowed away the lights of the stranger sank lower till they reached the water's edge, and then the hull, masts and all sank out of sight. The cries of the drowning men could be distinctly heard, and they gave directions as they floated for a moment as to the course to find them. No one, however, was rescued. It would seem the collision was not violent enough to disturb the passengers and they only knew of it from the talk of the crew. The Harvest Queen arrived at Queenstown Dec. 29th from San Francisco, and on the 30th sailed for Liverpool.

NEW YORK, January 14th.—The painful interest felt in the late of the Harvest Queen is increased rather than diminished by to-day's developments. There was a meeting to-day between Mr. Curtis of the White Star line, Capt. Jennings, and C. Lamson, agent in New York of the Black Ball Line. Capt. Jennings made a report of the collision to the British Vice-Consul, but not until this morning. Application to see the log of the Adriatic was refused. This morning the British Vice-Consul refused to allow Captain Jennings' report to him to be seen, on the grounds that he had not yet had time to look over it.

NEW YORK, January 15th.—The circumstances attending the loss of the Harvest Queen, still remains a mystery. Philip Hamilton, the lookout on board of the Adriatic at the time of the collision with the vessel supposed to be the Harvest Queen in the Irish channel, has been interviewed, and affirms that the steamer struck and sunk said vessel December 31st. Hamilton says he heard cries for help shortly after the collision, and that the boats of the steamer were lowered and a search made for those in the water, but no one was picked up. He is supported in his statement by others of the crew of the Adriatic.

He is a dapper young fellow, and claims acquaintance with Californians passing through Chicago, cementing his claim by pretending to be a nephew of General P. Edward Connor, known to all Californians; he will ask for a small loan—to be repaid when his uncle arrives—but don't you let him have it, unless you desire to encourage the boy who played the railroad conductor swindle so successfully in this city. He would present himself with a conductor's cap on, at a dwelling, and say that a valuable dog or bird for the person addressed was held for a few dollars of charges, and that on the charges being paid, etc. Of course no dog or bird ever came to the victim who paid the charges, and the bogus conductor was set down as the worst of frauds. This ingenious youth, giving the name of Connors, is now located in Chicago, attempting to practice on the credulity of Californians, but his appeal fell on flinty ground the other day; "Want to borrow a small sum, do you?" "Yes, about two-and-a-half." "And expect your uncle in the morning, do you?" "Yes, sir." "Well, you had better wait till morning, and get what you need from him. I have got a nephew around the corner, waiting for me, and as he has probably borrowed from somebody else, I would not disappoint him for the world." The youth thought it was a shame that "a California boy" couldn't strike an old friend for two-and-a-half, and felt quite disgusted at being found out. He has probably invented some new dodge by this time, however.

A POINT OF LAW.—An excited individual with a bloody nose rushed yesterday into a lawyer's office, threw his hat into the corner and himself into a chair, and breathlessly said:

"Can a man sue me for $25,000 damages for telling him he didn't have sense enough to frame a new Constitution for the State?"

"Certainly he can," responded the lawyer.

"After he had banged me in the nose and kicked me in the abdomen, and told me I was a blear-eyed penitentiary outcast, before a whole crowd, and a bankrupt body-snatcher, then he can sue me for damages, too, and attach my homestead?"

"Yes," observed the man of law, "and he can have you hauled up before the Recorder and fined for using abusive and insulting language, besides."

"Well, then," said the unhappy man, as he applied his handkerchief to his nose and pulled his hat over his brow, "the next time I vote for a Constitution Convention to accommodate the Democratic party I guess she will know it, that's all."

"I guess she will," mused the lawyer, as he closed the door.—[San Antonio Herald.

The attorney in a Denver cow case concluded his argument as follows: May it please your honor, this is a stupendous question. Its decision by you, on this day, will live in judicial history long after you and I shall have passed from this scene of earthly glory and sublunary vanity; when the tower of Pisa shall be forgotten, when Waterloo and Borodino shall grow dim in the cycles of receding centuries; when the name of Eugene, Marlborough and Napoleon are no longer remembered; when the pyramids of the Pharaohs shall have crumbled into dust; when the hippopotamus shall cease to inhabit its native Nile; when our own rock-ribbed Territory shall no more grow 300-pound squashes: even then your ruling upon this demurrer will survive in the antique volumes of legal lore as fresh, green and imperishable as a Big Thompson grasshopper or a Colorado potato-bug.

MEXICAN SUGAR.—The production of sugars in the terra calientes of Mexico is said to have been stimulated of late by the protracted troubles in Cuba, and a short time ago the first consignment of Mexican sugar reached the United States. It is thought that at no distant period Mexico will be successfully competing with the West Indies, for the markets of the Union.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE
IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUIN
THE PUBLIC ARE CAUTIONED AGAINST the unfounded statements frequently made, "that the composition of CHLORODYNE is known to Chemists and the Medical profession." The fact is, Chlorodyne was discovered and invented by Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE (ex Army Medical Staff,) and so named by him, and it has baffled all attempts at analysis by the first Chemists of
