THE LATE BATTLE IN VIRGINIA.

Flight of Stonewall Jackson Toward Richmond.

Destruction of Bridges to Prevent Pursuit.

The Rebel Loss Stated at Over Two Thousand.

Additional Names of Our Killed and Wounded,

CULPEPPER COURT HOUSE, VA., August 12, 1862.

The flight of Stonewall Jackson shows that he fears our troops.

On Saturday he engaged, with his whole force, numbering at least 30,000 men, a portion of the corps of General Banks, who behaved most nobly, holding the enemy in check, and, with the aid of one division of General McDowell's and General Sigel's corps, which arrived late in the day, driving the enemy from several positions, and finally from the field of battle.

Jackson's loss can scarcely be less than fifteen hundred. Our loss is much less.

The battle was decidedly the bloodiest of the war.

On Sunday Jackson remained idle, the troops on both sides being exhausted.

On Monday Jackson sent in a flag of truce, asking to bury his dead, a large proportion of whom still lie on the field of battle, pending which he escaped with his trains.

This morning Jackson's whole army was gone.

General Buford, with his cavalry and artillery, quickened Jackson's pace towards Gordonsville, compelling him to burn bridges to save himself.

Jackson obviously does not intend to stop running until he reaches the rebel fortifications at Richmond.

General Pope has fully met the public expectations of him.

The enemy now only show their backs to our forces.

The valley of the Shenandoah, and the whole country from Manassas to Gordonsville, is no longer polluted by the presence of armed rebels.

Jackson's servant has just come into the quarters of General McDowell, and reports that his master admits a loss of over 2,000 men in the engagement of Saturday. No wonder the rebel general ran.

The rebels have abandoned their position near Cedar Mountain, which was one of great strength, and are in full retreat to the Rapidan, pursued by the cavalry and artillery of General Sigel's corps, who have just been sent out. Jackson's, Ewell's and Hill's forces are said to be crossing to the other side of the Rapidan, and Longstreet, who had advanced from Orange Court House with reinforcements for the expected battle, has halted on the southern bank of the river.

There was no skirmishing yesterday, but the troops were in position and under arms during the day. General Pope, having concentrated his army, and having been heavily reinforced since the battle of Saturday, is again ready to advance. It is supposed that the rebels will dispute the passage of the Rapidan.

Prisoners report that Jackson considered himself strong enough to drive back the whole Army of Virginia, and expected to occupy Culpepper on Saturday. He was checked by the steadiness of General Banks' troops, and, being surprised by the sudden arrival of reinforcements, the strength of which he did not know, has abandoned the offensive, and withdrawn his force without a general battle.

The position near the Rapidan is considered the true defensive line of the rebels, and one which they will endeavor to hold.

General Banks is in Culpepper, unable from his injuries to remain in the field. General Williams is in command of the Second corps, and the troops, though suffering so severely on Saturday in the face of an enemy so immensely superior, are in good spirits, and have recovered from the fatigue of the battle and long marches in the excessive heat. The rest of the army is in the best condition. The men have been supplied with food during the two days they have been under arms, and are impatient for an advance. The wounded have mostly been removed. Those still in Culpepper are well cared for. The following is a complete list, corrected this morning, of the LOSSES IN OFFICERS OF THE SECOND MASSACHUSETTS.

KILLED.

Captain Abbott. Captain Cary.
Captain Williams. Captain Goodwin.
Lieutenant Stephens S. Perkins.

WOUNDED.

Major Savage, severely, in three places, but not fatally.

WOUNDED, AND PRISONERS.

Surgeon Leland, severely. Capt. Quincy, prisoner, and probably wounded.
Lieut. Russell, slightly.
Lieut. Browning, severely. Lieut. Grafton, slightly.
Lieut. Robinson, slightly. Lieut. Oakey, slightly.
Lieut. Miller, wounded, and prisoner.

In all, fourteen officers of twenty-three who went into the fight.

Of enlisted men twenty-five were killed, ninety-five wounded, and thirty-seven missing.

The regiment fought with the most determined gallantry, and suffered in proportion.

CULPEPPER COURT HOUSE, VA., Aug. 12—11 A. M.

General Bayard's cavalry brigade, with artillery, has just been sent out, and, in addition to the forces now pushing the rebels, the troops are all in readiness to move, and will march. The weather is still intensely hot. Some of the reinforcements which have just arrived marched yesterday twenty-five miles, but are in good condition, and eager to advance this morning.

On Saturday evening General Ricketts, of McDowell's corps, occupied the front. The rebel general commanding, becoming emboldened, pushed about twelve thousand men over the battle ground and through the wood on our side of it; but one rebel battery succeeded in getting through the woods and commenced playing upon the division of General Ricketts.

Upon discovering what the enemy were about, Major Davis, Chief of Artillery, ordered Captain Thompson, of the Second Maryland, and Captain Hall, of the Second Maine, batteries, into position, and in a few moments commenced returning the enemy's fire. The range being so short and the aim so admirable, the rebels soon abandoned their position, withdrawing their guns, and, with the entire force supporting them, returned to the mountain.

In the morning it was discovered that we had killed nine horses attached to the rebel battery, and, without doubt, many of the gunners, whose bodies had been carried off during the darkness. Rebel prisoners taken yesterday say the artillery firing at night did them more harm than that during the day, as their men came out upon the plain to camp for the night, and did not anticipate so vigorous a response to their firing.

General Milroy, of General Sigel's corps, now has his headquarters on Cedar Mountain. General Buford, with his brigade of cavalry, consisting of the First Vermont, First Michigan and Fifth New York, and one battery of artillery, this morning went out upon the Orange road, to the right of Cedar Mountain, and when about three miles from the battle field of Saturday met a regiment of rebel cavalry drawn up in line of battle. He immediately formed his own brigade in line, sent out skirmishers to the right and left, placed his battery within range, and gradually approached the enemy. The moment one round had been fired from the battery, the enemy broke his line of battle, dashed down into the road and galloped off at a furious rate. Buford gave chase, and it is hoped will succeed in overtaking him before he reaches the Rapidan.

The wounded in the hospitals at Culpepper are doing well.

WASHINGTON, August 13, 1862.

Advices from Culpepper, dated yesterday, say that owing to the severe injury General Banks received the command of the Second corps has devolved upon General Williams.

Brigadier General Crawford commands the division of General Williams, and General Green commands the division of General Augur, who is severely, but not dangerously wounded.

An escaped prisoner saw at Orange Court House General Prince and Captain Wilkins, in the hands of the rebels. They were on their way to Richmond.

On visiting the battle field, many, if not the greater part, of our dead officers were found, some partially, and others entirely, stripped of their uniforms.

The dead Union and the dead rebel soldiers lay about promiscuously and intermixed on the field.

The rebel Generals Stewart and Early held the field, and conversed freely with our own officers about the battle. They stated that the full brigades of Generals A. P. Hill, Longstreet and Ewell were opposed to our small band of heroes, and that they were terribly cut to pieces by our fire—leading to the inference that they suffered fully as much as ourselves.

As previously stated, Stonewall Jackson commanded the field in person.

General Roberts, of Major General Pope's staff, is Military Governor of the post of Culpepper, and on the day of the battle he rendered valuable assistance by his military experience.

A Soldier's Account of the Battle.

BIVOUAC ON THE BATTLEFIELD OF SLAUGHTER HILL, August 11, 1862.

On Friday, the 9th, we of the Ninth New York State Militia left our camp and marched out in advance, and bivouacked for the night within two miles of the enemy's line. The battle commenced on Saturday morning on the right wing of Gen. Banks's army. Our brigade advanced, but were held as a reserve. The battle lasted all day, all of Banks' army being engaged. About five o'clock in the afternoon we received orders to advance, as Gen. Banks had suffered severely; many of his regiments being nearly destroyed. This regiment was under the command of Major Allan Rutherford, as the colonel was still at Washington and the lieutenant colonel away sick. We advanced on the field and halted several times, so that it was nearly eight o'clock before we came under the fire of the enemy. The moon had risen, and it was a beautiful night. The fire of the enemy's artillery was very heavy, but, as they did not have our range, most of their shells went over our heads. We continued to advance so as to flank their position. The shells going through the air looked like shooting stars. They made a frightful noise, a perfect howl. We lost during this advance only one man killed and two wounded. The other regiments of our brigade suffered most; our regiment was lucky being on the right of the brigade. I had a very lucky escape, as over twenty shells burst within fifty feet o me. I regard it as wonderful that I was not hurt. We were under the fire of their batteries from eight o'clock until eleven o'clock. At that hour orders were received from General Hartsuff for our regiment to advance to the support of two of our batteries that were shelling the enemy. The General said, that he had selected our regiment for this duty, as being one in which he had perfect confidence. He also spoke to the regiment, and said that he hoped to hear a good account of them. We remained in support of the battery until daylight next morning (Sunday). The enemy withdrew from their position during the night. We received orders not to advance, but we remained where we were.

Official Report of the Pursuit of the Rebels.

HEADQUARTERS, ARMY OF VIRGINIA, August 13, 1862.

MAJOR GENERAL HALLECK:—

No. 25, the subjoined report, was received at one o'clock this morning. JOHN POPE, Major General.

HEADQUARTERS, CAVALRY BRIGADE, SECOND CORPS, ARMY OF VIRGINIA, August 13, 1862.

Colonel GEORGE D. RUGGLES, Chief of Staff:—

I have the honor to report that, in obedience to instructions received from the Major General commanding the Army of Virginia, this morning I proceeded in the direction of Orange Courthouse, with the First Vermont, Colonel Tompkins; First Michigan, Colonel Broadhead; First Virginia, Lieutenant Colonel Richmond; Fifth New York, Colonel DeForest (cavalry regiments), and four pieces of artillery.

About three or four miles from your headquarters I discovered the pickets of the enemy, and soon after two large bodies of cavalry, and the woods filled with footmen. A strong line of skirmishers was thrown out, who rode along in the pathway. When in range of the enemy a few shells were thrown, which dispersed him in all directions. The footmen kept in the woods, and fled by Rapidan station. The cavalry fled down the Orange Court House roads.

I pursued them cautiously, fearing an ambuscade, to Crooked river, which had swollen to such an extent that my artillery could not cross. Part of the First Vermont and First Virginia cavalry swam the river, and continued the pursuit to Robinson river, which was so full and turbulent as to be extremely dangerous.

In the pursuit, a good many prisoners wounded in Saturday's fight were found almost abandoned. Major Andrews, Chief of Artillery to General Jackson, was found badly wounded at Crooked river, in charge of an assistant surgeon.

The flight of the enemy after Saturday's fight was most precipitate, and in great confusion. His old camp was strewn with dead men, horses and arms. His flag of truce yesterday to bury his dead afforded some more time for his escape.

The enemy to-day has the benefit of a hard rain, which put high waters between us.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOHN BUFORD, Brigadier General.

To Major General G. B. McCLELLAN, commanding Army of the Potomac.

LETTER FROM GENERAL HALLECK TO GENERAL LEE.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, WASHINGTON, August 7, 1862.

General LEE, Commanding, &c.:—

GENERAL—Your letter of July 6 was received at the Adjutant General's office on the 14th; but supposing from its endorsement that it required no further reply, it was filed without being shown to the President or Secretary of War.

I learn to-day for the first time that such letter had been received, and hasten to reply.

No authentic information has been received in relation to the execution of either John Owen or Mumford, but measures will be immediately taken to ascertain the facts of these alleged executions, of which you will be duly informed.

I need hardly assure you, General, that so far as the United States authorities are concerned this contest will be carried on in strict accordance with the laws and usages of modern warfare, and that all excesses will be duly punished. In regard to the burning of bridges, &c., within our lines by persons in disguise as peaceful citizens, I refer you to my letter of the 22d of January last to General Price. I think you will find the views there expressed as not materially differing from those stated in your letter. In regard to retaliation, by taking the lives of innocent persons, I know of no modern authority which justifies it, except in the extreme case of a war with any uncivilized foe which has himself first established such a barbarous rule. The United States will never countenance such a proceeding unless forced to do so by the barbarous conduct of an enemy who first applies such a rule to our own citizens. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
H. W. HALLECK,
General-in-Chief United States Army.

LETTER FROM GENERAL HALLECK TO GENERAL M'CLELLAN.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, WASHINGTON, August 13, 1862.

Major General GEORGE B. McCLELLAN, Commanding Army of the Potomac:—

GENERAL—I have just received from the Adjutant General's office your letter of July 30, enclosing a letter from General R. E. Lee, of July 21. The letters of General Dix and Major Wood will furnish you with the proper information for a reply to General Lee's complaints in regard to the treatment of prisoners at Fortress Monroe. The government of the United States has never authorized any extortion of oaths of allegiance or military parole, and has forbidden any measures to be resorted to tending to that end. Instead of extorting oaths of allegiance and paroles, it has refused the application of several thousand prisoners to be permitted to take them and return to their homes in the rebel States. At the same time this government claims, and will exercise the right, to arrest, imprison or place beyond its military lines any persons suspected of giving aid and information to its enemies, or of any other treasonable act. And if persons so arrested voluntarily take the oath of allegiance, or give their military parole, and afterwards violate their plighted faith, they will be punished according to the laws and usages of war. You will assure General Lee that no unseemly threats of retaliation on his part will deter this government from exercising its lawful rights over both the persons and property of whatsoever name or character.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
H. W. HALLECK,
General-in-Chief United States Army.

LETTER FROM GENERAL LEE TO GENERAL HALLECK.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES, NEAR RICHMOND, VA., August 2, 1862.

To the GENERAL COMMANDING the UNITED STATES ARMY, Washington:—

GENERAL—On the 29th of June last I was instructed by the Secretary of War to inquire of Major General McClellan as to the truth of alleged murders committed on our citizens by officers of the United States Army. The cases of Wm. B. Mumford, reported to have been murdered at New Orleans by order of Major General B. F. Butler, and Colonel John Owen, reported to have been murdered in Missouri by order of Major General Pope, were those referred to. I had the honor to be informed by Major General McClellan that he had referred these inquiries to his government for a reply. No answer has yet been received.

The President of the Confederate States has since been credibly informed that numerous other officers of the army of the United States within the Confederacy have been guilty of felonies and capital offenses which are punishable by all laws, human and divine. I am directed by him to bring to your notice a few of
