Dr. Hunter on the Causes of Consumption.

LETTER NO. XV.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK HERALD.

SIR—I now come to the consideration of the causes which produce consumption. It is only by tracing the disease back to its source that the means necessary for its prevention can be discovered, or the treatment recited for its cure made plain and intelligible to the unprofessional reader.

Is consumption caused by inheritance? That it is generally so regarded will not be denied. Indeed, so common is this belief among the people that few persons who come to me for an examination fail to tell me that they "know their lungs cannot be affected for none of their family ever had consumption."

Now, nothing could be further from the truth than the supposition that this disease is the common result of some taint implanted in the system by the parents. Thousands every year lose their lives by mattering themselves that their disease cannot be serious because their family had previously escaped this scourge. They disregard the warning of a heated, hacking cough until the lungs become filled with tubercles, and only discover their error when, and it is too late to save them. What do the statistics of consumption teach us? Why that out of every hundred consumptives eighty acquire the disease from other causes, while only twenty inherit it in their family. Four cases out of every five occur without a trace of inheritance or predisposition. In my own practice, not more than fifteen in every hundred have any knowledge of the disease having previously occurred in their families, while eighty-five trace it directly to "neglected colds," consumption in an "unsure way," "dusty work-shops," or some other source of local irritation. And in this respect my experience is not materially different from that of other physicians who have studied the history of consumption. Dr. Watson, one of the physicians of the Hospital for Consumption in London, places the acquired cases at seventy nine per cent, and those arising from family predisposition at twenty-one per cent. Briquet, physician to one of the Paris hospitals, tells us that out of ninety-eight cases occurring under his observation, sixty-eight were unable to discover any taint in his family. But, it will be answered, "Whole families are known to die of this disease one after another." I admit it; but does it prove that the disease is necessarily hereditary? Does it prove anything more than that some families are more liable to consumption than others?

In some rare instances consumption is inherited; but never unless the mother has the disease when the child is born, and then the child generally dies a few months after birth. In the same scale, small-pox and fifty other diseases are hereditary. I have seen a child born with small-pox pustules over the whole body. A mother that has not herself got small-pox can no more transmit it to her offspring than she could transmit small pox without having it. No parent can transmit what she has not.

We inherit from our parents form, features and temperament. In inheriting the form of our parents we inherit the liabilities which that form entails. If they are tall, the child will also be tall. If one be tall and the other short, some children may resemble one parent and some the other. If one has a large chest and the other a small one, the same difference will be found in the children. Whoever has a small chest has an increased liability to consumption from this cause. Children born with this deformity in their organism are always delicate in youth. They cannot run as far or lift as much as other boys of their age, and yet they may be perfectly healthy. They go on to the age of puberty without the least sign of consumption, and then one after another is taken each that age may sicken and fall into a decline. Why is this? It is because when youth and only expands into manhood and womanhood, a great increase takes place in the size of the body, and in quantity of blood in the system. This requires a corresponding increase in the quantity of the air received at each inspiration into the lungs. As the lungs are too small to admit this, there is a loss of balance between the quantity of the blood and the air, and as a consequence the blood becomes impure, tubercles are deposited, and the patient falls into consumption. I have seen every member of a family cut off in this way. On the other hand, where the parents have paid proper attention to the physical training of their children, by increasing the capacity of the lungs, I have seen them escape, though having every predisposition to Consumption. Again, if parents have any peculiar irritability of the mucous membrane of the air passages, the same will be found in their children, and this, by increasing their liability to catarrh and bronchitis, may predispose them to consumption; but predisposition is very different from inheritance. Every person may be said to be predisposed that has a small chest or an irritable mucous membrane. We may inherit these and other physical peculiarities, but no person since the foundation of the world ever yet inherited any disease unless the parent had that disease at the time of birth.

The second cause, and the one most common in this climate, is disease of the air passages—Catarrh Sore Throat or Bronchitis. These are generally caused by colds, but sometimes by dust. All catarrhal affections, whether of the nose, throat or lungs, produce thickening of the mucous membrane and more or less secretion of mucus. These tend to diminish the size of the tubes through which the air passes to the lungs, and, as a consequence, diminish the quantity of air received at each breath. Often we find in bronchitis the size of the bronchial tubes diminished one-third and even one half. When such is the case the patient is always short breathed. He cannot run up a flight of stairs or a hill as he could when in health, but soon gets out of wind and becomes fatigued. Even where the obstruction to the air tubes is slight and temporary, it produces a feverishness of the system, increased frequency of the pulse and diminished appetite. When the obstruction is greater, as is the case in asthma, these symptoms are increased, and the shortness of breath becomes a gasping for air. When a person dies from croup or drowning it is not the disease or the water which kills, but the carbon of the blood which poisons and paralyzes the heart and brain. Nothing will remove this carbon but the oxygen of the air. The fumes of burning charcoal when diffused through the air of a room cause death in the same way as drowning and croup, by simply preventing the oxygen of the air from reaching the lungs.

Now, since death follows from shutting off the air in from one to two minutes, you can readily understand that this function of the lungs is as necessary to life, and that even the slightest diminution in the quantity or the purity of the air must be followed by great injury to health. The blood always becomes carbonaceous when the quantity of air is diminished, and the quantity of air is always diminished when the air tubes are thickened by catarrhal inflammation or clogged by sticky mucus. Consumption is only the consequence of this carbonaceous impurity of blood. Tubercles themselves are only deposits of carbon in the tissue of the lungs, and the ulceration and destruction of this important organ results directly from their presence.

A HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS

A Pure and Powerful Tonic, Corrective and Alterative of Wonderful Efficacy in Diseases of the STOMACH, LIVER AND BOWELS, PROTECTIVE PROPERTIES. Prevents Fever and Ague and Bilious Remittent Fever. Fortifies the System against Miasma and the Evil Effects of Unwholesome Water, Invigorates the Organs of Digestion and the Bowels; Steadies the Nerves, and tends to Prolong Life.

REMEDIAL PROPERTIES.

Cures Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Sick and Nervous Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation, Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Sea Sickness, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex, Arising from Bodily Weakness, whether Inherent in the System or Produced by Special Causes.

Nothing that is not wholesome, genial, and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS. This popular preparation contains no mineral of any kind; no deadly botanical element; no fiery excitant; but is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants, with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants.

It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water and other external causes, HOSTETTER'S BITTERS may be relied on as a safeguard.

In districts infected with fever and ague it has been found infallible as a preventive and invaluable as a remedy. Thousands who resort to it under apprehension of an attack escape the scourge, and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance, are cured by a very brief course of this marvellous medicine. Fever and ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain, until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health within a few days by the use of HOSTETTER'S BITTERS.

The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated and the appetite restored by this agreeable tonic, and hence it works wonders in cases of dyspepsia and in less confirmed forms of indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless aperient, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs.

Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous Attacks, Lowness of Spirits and Fits of Languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes.

The agony of Bilious Colic is immediately assuaged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally resorting to it the return of the complaint may be prevented.

For seasickness it is a positive specific, either removing the contents of the stomach, and with them the terrible nausea, or relieving the internal irritation by which the disposition to vomit is caused.

As a general tonic HOSTETTER'S BITTERS produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of constitutional weakness, premature decay and debility and decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed it operates to reinforce and re-establish them.

Last, but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials and entirely free from the acrid elements present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day.

The fact is well known to physicians that the basis of all the medicinal stimulants of the pharmacopœia is fiery and unpurified alcohol, an article which no medication can deprive of its pernicious properties. The liquors of commerce are still worse. They are all adulterated. Hence the faculty, while universally admitting the necessity for diffusive tonics, hesitate to employ those in common use lest the remedy should prove deadlier than the disease. During the last twenty years the quality of these articles has been continually deteriorating, and it is notorious that the fluids which bear the names of the various spirituous liquors are favored and fired up with corrosive drugs, to a degree which renders them dangerous to the healthy and murderous to the sick. Under these circumstances medical men are glad to avail themselves of a preparation absolutely free from those objections, and combining the three invaluable properties of a stimulant, a corrective and a gentle laxative. HOSTETTER'S BITTERS are therefore held in high estimation by our most eminent practitioners, and bid fair to supersede all other invigorants, both in public hospitals and in private practice. No family medicine has been so universally, and, it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as HOSTETTER'S BITTERS.

Prepared by HOSTETTER & SMITH, Pittsburg, Penn., U. S., and sold by all druggists and family grocers everywhere. Depot, No. 128 Broadway.
