Heavy Forgeries in New York.

New York, October 24.—Henry Talmage & Co. applied to the Third National Bank on Monday for a loan, presenting two certificates of scrip of the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company, for $10,000 each, as collateral. The bank officials accepted the securities. Later in the day they learned from the Insurance Company that the certificates were not genuine, but had been raised from $100 each, the amount for which they were issued in 1876, to Wm. C. Gilman, a broker in insurance scrip. This discovery was made public this morning, and banks where Gilman transacted business were scenes of universal excitement. The vaults were opened, and his securities closely scrutinized.

At the American Exchange Bank, ten certificates of the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company were found, representing an aggregate value of $87,300, and a messenger was hastily sent to the office of the Insurance Company, to ascertain their true value. A careful comparison of dates, names and amounts, proved that these certificates had been originally purchased by Gilman at different times during the years 1875 1876 and 1877, in various sums, aggregating only $1260. In this lot of certificates hypothecated at the American Exchange Bank, the forgeries amounted to $86,000. These forged certificates were presented at the Bank and deposited by Gilman in person. So highly was he esteemed by the officials that they were not critically examined, and the amount of money he requested was promptly paid to him. This amount was estimated by one of the clerks at between $50,000 and $60,000. Information was received later that another set of these certificates had been discovered purporting to have been issued for $25,000, which as originally delivered to Gilman, were for $380. A Trust Company, the name of which could not be learned, also sent in a long list of securities upon which loans had been effected for a large amount. Fifteen of 24 certificates held by this institution were not altered, but the remainder had been raised from $1460 to $74,000. No system had been adopted in making the forgeries. In one instance he had altered a $30 certificate to $10,000. When his needs were not urgent he would deposite genuine scrip, obtaining such a percentage as the banker would advance. The forgeries were confined to small certificates originally, the amounts varying from $30 to $100. As far as the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company is concerned, all but three certificates issued to Gilman have been accounted for, and these are for $100 each. It is thought possible that these have been altered like others of the value to $10,000 each, which will make the gross amount of forgeries as follows: Third National Bank—Real value, $200; forged amount $20,000. American Exchange Bank—Real value, $1260; forged amount, $87,300. Henry Talmage & Co.—Real value, $380; forged amount, $25,000. Trust Company—Real value, $1460; forged amount, $74,000. Outstanding certificates—$300; forged, $30,000. Total Real value, $3600; forged, $256,370.

It was stated this evening that two shares of Bank stock were forged, and in this latter case $1100 had been raised to $11,000.

The firm of Gilman & Co. had been engaged in insurance scrip brokerage for over forty years. Gilman has not been at his office since Saturday, when he stated that he was going to Norwich, and would return on Monday morning. He returned to the city yesterday morning, with his family, but did not go to his office. Detectives were put on his track, but could not find him. A requisition has been obtained from Governor Robinson for him, so that he can be arrested in any State in which he may be found.

New York, Oct. 3.—The excitement caused by the exposure of the forgeries of Wm. C. Gilman was intensified to-day by the discovery that stock of the American Exchange and Metropolitan Banks had also been forged, and that several larger institutions were heavy losers. The forgeries so far discovered aggregate $352,500, upon which Gilman raised $247,900. The belief that Gilman has committed suicide is generally credited in insurance and bank circles. The principal losers were large corporations. Two money lenders, whose names are not yet known, are reported as among the victims, one losing $25,000 and the other $20,000. The forgeries, it was found, began on January 26th, 1876, scrip of Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company being altered from $50 to $5000. At first Gilman operated slowly, but as business losses crowded on him, he became bolder and forgery became an almost every day occurrence. He dealt largely in scrip of the New York Mutual Marine, Commercial Mutual and Union Mutual Insurance Companies, but a full examination showed that the forgeries were strictly confined to the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company and the American Exchange and Metropolitan Banks. The rumor that the United States Trust Company had been defrauded by Gilman proves to be false. To the losses must be added fifty-three shares of American Exchange Bank stock, which, it is believed, are raised ten-fold, and have been hypothecated within twenty per cent. of the face value.

Mars Seen Through the Telescope.

Mars is now a superb object seen through the telescope; we had on Tuesday evening a view of the ruddy planet through the fine instrument of the Roger Williams Observatory that is something to remember for a lifetime.

A fiery ball of glowing red seemed suddenly to spring into existence as the planet entered the field of vision. In size it approached that of the full moon when high up in the heavens, while such was the brightness and fierceness of its rays that we involuntarily sought to shade our eyes from the glass. At first we saw nothing but a brilliant flame-colored disc, its circumference aglow with prismatic hues caused by chromatic aberration, without a trace of zones of snow or the strange marking that practiced eyes discover on the Martian globe. As we observed more carefully, the ice-bound circles came as plainly into view as the well-known features of the man in the moon on our own luminary, and we enjoyed a peep at the Martian poles, the southern polar cap being much larger than the northern, for it is summer in the northern hemisphere, and the ice more around the pole has partly disappeared under the influence of the sun's heat. A still more careful scrutiny revealed the presence of dusky spots on the beaming disc. These indicate the land, which is of reddish hue when the planet's atmosphere is clear, while the lighter parts of a greenish hue mark contour of the seas and oceans.

Thus with our own eyes we saw land, water, and ice on the surface of our Martian neighbor, and had a view of its ruddy disc, which, after a few weeks have passed, will not be equalled in size and brilliancy until 1892. Though Jupiter, with its brilliant belts and sparkling moons, is a grander telescopic object, and Saturn, with its wondrous ring system and numerous moons, excels in beauty every sight in the celestial picture gallery, yet we obtain a better view, and on a larger scale, of Mars than of any other object in the heavens except the moon. It is probably the only surface which is ever visible, for Venus, though the most splendid of all planets to the naked eye, is, on account of its great lustre, unsatisfactory for telescope observation, while Jupiter and Saturn are surrounded by cloud envelopes of immense extent that hide the solid portion from the eyes. Mars then for a month to come will afford unusual facilities for observation, beautiful to the naked eye, and magnificent beyond description when revealed by the far seeing eye that pierces the depths of space.—[Providence, (Rhode Island) Journal.

How Delos Lost his Scalp.

I know'd just as well as I know'd anything that my hair was going to be mined in less'n two minutes unless some o' the boys seen my fix and made the devil a present o' that Injin. I heard some o' the boys give a shout, and knew by the scatterin' among the squaws and the young ones that some o' 'em were a comin'. I heard a shot and a yell, and the squaw that had yanked me down fell dead with half her body on me. The big Injin was game, anyhow. He kicked the dead squaw off o' me, and then set one o' his feet on my chest. The numb feelin' had almost left me, and I could see the fringe on the leggins o' the Injin. I know'd what he were after, and if ever a man cossed and swore to himself that man was me, because none o' the boys seemed to get there, nor to shoot. Two o' the soldiers was a comin' for me all the time, but the business was done so quick that they didn't have time to shoot agin' after killin' the squaw, till the thing were over; but it seemed mor'n a week to me.

The Injin bent down quick and grabbed me in the scalplock. Lord! how he jerked. I shut my eyes. Then it felt as if some one had ripp'd a gash with a dull pair o' scissors all around the top o' my head, and then poured a ladel full o' hot lead in it. A flash o' the awfullest, sharpest pain that kin be imagined ran all through me, clean to the end o' my toes. Then it seemed as if a horse was hitched to my hair and he was hit with a whip, give a sudden spring, and tore the top o' my head off from side to side. I cud feel my knees draw up, and my hands go shut and grab in the snow, and I set my nails clean into the flesh. The sensation was jest as if from the top o' my head there had run cords down through my body, which were fastened in my flesh all along, and that these had all tore loose from my toes up, and followed the top o' my head when it was jerked off. I know'd I was scalped, and that were all I know'd for three days.

About the time I lost my hair the cav'ly came up, and the Injins was licked, and there wasn't many o' 'em got away. The boys who saw the Injin scalp me said they killed him, but if they did they didn't get my scalp back. It might a got lost in the snow, though. They sent me to Laramie, and for four or five weeks I had a leetle the sorest head that ever set on a man's shoulders. They let me come East to get round, and I've since been hon'ably discharged, the gov' ment sayin' that a man that had been scalped once by the Injins had done all that cud nat'rally be expected of him from his country. I'm a tickin', though, to get out among those dirty Nee Purses, and if the boys had anybody else a handfu' of 'em but that Gen. Howard, who don't know no more about fightin' Injins than the Prince o' Wales, I'd be out there, too, as quick as I cud get there. There's one thing certain, the devils can't get any more scalp out o' me if they ever have a chance.—N. Y. Sun.

Trained Oysters.

We have heard and read a great many "fish stories," but the following "oyster story," we think, surpasses them all. It is from a recent New York paper.

Mr. Hamilton, of the Aquarium in this city, has developed a new instance of the wonderful effect of kindness upon the lower orders of animals. In a small tank are kept some fine live oysters. They looked so lonely that Mr. Hamilton daily dropped some powdered fish and other titbits that they are known to be fond of upon them. They showed no appreciation of this kindness for weeks, but one day last week, as Mr. Hamilton was making his rounds, he was surprised to see the shells of the oysters open at his approach, as if they expected to receive food. Reaching down he placed the food within the expanded shell of one of the bivalves, which immediately closed. This was repeated until the oyster became so tame as to allow Mr. Hamilton to insert his finger into its shell. A person who witnessed this operation thought that the oyster would not know the difference if he put his finger in. He tried it, and instantly the sharp jaws closed with a force that made the experimenter squirm with pain. But as soon as Mr. Hamilton touched the oyster it seemed to recognize him, and the imprisoned finger was released. The oysters endeavour to follow their friend, propelling themselves with a jerking motion by quickly opening and shutting their shells.

Scaring Away an Eclipse.

Soon after my arrival in Bagdad (says W. F. Fogg, in Scribner), on the evening of the 1st of May, as we were dining on the terrace, we were startled by a most terrific din. We then noticed that there was a nearly total eclipse of the moon, and upon consulting an English almanac we found that it would be "invisible at Greenwich, but a total eclipse in Australia and some parts of Asia." The tumult increased, and soon the whole population seemed to have assembled on the house-tops, armed with pots, pans and kitchen utensils, which they beat with a tremendous clatter, at the same time screaming and howling at the top of their voices. Frequent reports of guns and pistols added to the turmoil, which was kept up for nearly an hour, until they succeeded in frightening away the Jin, or evil spirit, who had caught hold of the moon. It was a most amusing scene, although it interfered seriously with our dinner. Our own servants caught the excitement, and deserted the table without ceremony. Our host told us the next day that they well nigh knocked the bottoms out of all his kitchen utensils. It was, however, a complete success, and when our servants returned to their duty, the moon was shining as brightly as ever, and upon their faces was an air of complacent satisfaction.

An Unfortunate Family.

Of the six sons born to ex-Chancellor Halstead, of New Jersey, whose death was recently announced, five have met violent deaths. Caleb, the eldest, was killed at a fox hunt, near Elizabeth, some forty years ago. He fell from his horse, was caught in the stirrup, and dragged until his brains were dashed out. Robert was captain of the buck Griffin, owned by the famous "Pet" Halstead. In it he carried round the Horn to California, in 1848, Pet, Abe, George and Frank Halstead, among the first to the gold fields. The Captain was carried on in his prime by an attack of "Yellow Jack." The terrible fate of Pet, the most famous of all the Halsteads, is yet fresh in the public mind. He was killed by George Botts in a woman quarrel. Not long after Abe, the fourth of the brothers, had both legs mangled by a horse-car accident so that he died. His friends said he was assisting a lady when he was caught under the wheels. Then came Frank, whose body was found in Minnetonka Lake, Wisconsin, with a sack full of stones about his neck. The verdict was suicide; and Major George B. Halstead, the surviving brother, went to look after the deceased's interest in the West, and bring the body home for interment.—Exchange.

Check of a New York Lawyer.

Quite a remarkable case has lately come up in the bill of one Moses, who has been defending the policy holders of the Continental Life, and who charges that concern, among other things, $10 for talking with his client (Stephen English), $1,000 for miscellaneous services, among which are talking with reporters and making "bitter enemies," and finally $100 for time occupied in making out his bill. This last item has never been paralleled except by the Vermont tavern keeper who entertained Lucian Bonaparte and his attendants, and after enumerating everything he could remember, finally added $20 "for making a d—d fuss generally." Disturbing is a wholesome discipline at times, and it seems as if judges might do themselves credit by resorting to it more frequently.—[New York World.

GOOD ADVICE.—Ask no woman her age. Never joke with a widow. Never contradict a man that stutters. Be civil to all rich uncles and aunts. Your oldest hat, of course, to an evening party. Always sit next to the carver, if you can, at dinner. Keep your own secrets. Tell no human being you dye your whiskers. Wind up your conduct like your watch once every day. Examine minutely whether you are "fast" or "slow." Make friends with the steward on board a steamer; there's no knowing how soon you may be in his power. Write not one letter more than you can help; the man who keeps up a large correspondence is a martyr, tied, not to the stake but to the post."

An English lady at the Court of Vienna, with whom an "Imperial Highness" danced three times on the same evening, flattered by his attention, frankly expressed her gratification at the compliment. "I did not intend it as a compliment," was the answered. "Then," said the lady, "your Highness must be very fond of dancing." "I detest dancing," was the unsatisfactory response. "What, then, may I ask, can be your Imperial Highness' motive for dancing?" "Madame," was the crafted personage's curt reply, "my medical attendant advises me to perspire."

Murray & Lanman's Florida Water!

THIS CELEBRATED FLORAL PERFUME has been a favorite with the fashionable world in all parts of the globe for nearly half a century; surpassing in delicacy and durability of its odor, the finest Eau De Cologne or other Perfumes that have been hitherto imported into these Islands. MURRAY & LANMAN'S Florida Water is unsurpassed as an Extract for the Handkerchief, and is also superior to any perfume ever used for Bathing, Cleaning the Teeth and Sweetening the Breath. It also allays the irritation caused by ordinary eruptions, and removes Tan, Freckles, Pimples or Blotches from the face, neck and arms. It relieves nervous headache and imparts a glow of freshness and vigor, however used and is a most gentle and stimulating odor.
