WEDNESDAY, JAN. 30, 1878.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We wish it distinctly understood, that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the sentiments expressed in communications from correspondents, which we will gladly publish when conched in temperate and respectful language—always omitting offensive personalities, of which we must be the exclusive judge. Every communication sent us must be accompanied with a responsible name to insure insertion in our columns.

Correspondents will please write as tightly as possible, and on one side of a sheet of paper. We invite communications from all quarters, because to that way only can we expect to be kept informed of what is going on outside our immediate neighborhood.

THE general election for members of the Legislative Assembly of the Kingdom, will take place on February 6th next. We have only room to say in this connection, that the importance of a judicious choice of the right kind of men for the responsible office of making laws for the people, cannot be over estimated. A failure to make such choice must be productive of mischief which cannot be cured in a day.

ON Thursday morning last His Majesty, gave a complimentary breakfast at the Palace, to Captain von Wickede, of H. I. G. M. Frigate Elisabeth. There were present on the occasion, His Majesty, the Queen Consort and a number of the high dignitaries attached to the King's household, Cabinet and Staff; Captain von Wickede and a number of his officers.

This graceful compliment on the part of His Majesty, King Kalakaua, to the representatives of the great German Empire, was alike creditable to both countries. Such royal courtesies are ever held in remembrance, and tend to preserve the best of feelings between nations as between individuals. The Frigate Elisabeth went to sea on the afternoon of the same day, bound home via Manatlan. Success attend her.

THE rumored proposal of England to purchase the Turkish fleet, is one of such a novel and startling character that we were disposed to treat it as a canard gotten up by some coy connected with the telegraph, for the purpose of a sensation; but on looking over our Australian exchanges we find the matter treated in some of the papers as a possible thing after all. The Auckland Weekly News of December 29, discusses the matter in such a strain of seriousness that we are prone to believe that the editors of that very influential and able paper, regard the rumor as of more than probable significance. We repeat, that if such a proposition has really been made by England and accepted by Turkey, it is one of those commercial dodges that no other country except England would ever think of making under existing circumstances. When we remember how the secret purchase of the Suez Canal by England a few years ago startled the civilized world, when it was promulgated; we should not be at all astonished if the purchase of the splendid Turkish navy by England is a fait accompli; and by this sharp commercial transaction, she has added so much to her naval strength, as to render her almost invincible to Russia. But, we believe that if the facts were known about this pretended purchase, it would turn out to be nothing more than a sharp trick on the part of England and Turkey to save the Turkish fleet from falling into the hands of Russia, in the event of peace; or what is more likely to happen, the conquest of Turkey by the Russians. Nations like individuals are apt to do smart things, to get out of a scrape occasionally, and if England obtains possession of the Turkish fleet, under pretence of a bona fide purchase, we are mistaken in our estimation of the wily Gortchakoff, if he does not see through the thin gauze that seeks to hide this more than Yankee trick on the part of John Bull. If England has really got control of the Turkish fleet, she may depend upon it that she will have a nice time maintaining its possession; for as sure as fate, Russia would consider, and so treat such a transaction, as a casus belli. But outside of all this, such an acquisition to the British naval force would excite the envy of all other nations, in so much that they would consider the transaction as a threat to them.

There is such a thing as a nation overdoing things, just as individuals often do in their eagerness to get ahead in the race; and in this light we regard the transfer of the Turkish fleet to England.

By the arrival of the mail from Australia per steamer on Tuesday last, we are enabled to spread before our readers, a full summary of the war news from Europe. This summary shows that the contest is increasing in interest every hour, and that events are culminating very rapidly at the seat of war. The agitation in England is intense, and both Parliament and people are thoroughly aroused to the importance of the struggle. The complications arising out of the events of the war are both serious and significant, and must eventuate in some decisive movements in the near future, that will be both interesting and startling. It is evident now, that England's hour has come. She can no longer remain neutral in the contest. She must make a move of a decided character, or lose her prestige altogether as a great European power. Turkey is encouraged to continue the contest by the fact that the Queen of Great Britain has been compelled to call Parliament in extra session, to act in the present emergency. From the news from England we find that public sentiment is divided on the Russo-Turkish war and a bitter fight may be expected in Parliament in consequence of this division of public sentiment. The avowed determination on the part of the Sultan of Turkey to continue the contest to the bitter end, and the refusal of Russia to accept the mediation of a third power to arrange the terms of peace, coupled with the fact that Russia has ordered a fresh levy of 450,000 conscripts, leaves no room to hope for peace short of conquest; and thus the war will be prolonged so long as Turkey can hold out. If England joins Turkey, the other continental powers must follow, as their interests dictate, and the inevitable consequence must be, in our opinion a general European war. The time has passed for half way measures or temporizing on the part of England, and the other powers whose interest are immediately affected, by the events of the war, and therefore, each power must act on the defensive, or take a direct part in the contest. So far as Russia and Turkey are concerned, both nations are alike determined to carry the war to the last extremity. It is a relentless contest, in which Russia is striving for the mastery, and Turkey for national existence; but that fact, involves the necessity of the continental powers taking a hand in the contest, in order to preserve the equilibrium of the political relations in Europe. In fine, this Russo-Turkish war is a gigantic affair, and must be productive of momentous consequences not only to the nations immediately concerned but to all Christendom. Strange, that all this slaughter, bloodshed, rapine, murder and devastation, should be carried on in the sacred name of christianity, but so it is. Alas! poor human nature.

Increase of Our Commerce.

By letters received here from the Atlantic Coast, under date of December 7th, we have the gratifying intelligence that at that date the fine American clipper ship "Mystic Belle," was loading at the port of New York, for Honolulu direct, and may be expected to arrive here in the usual time required to make the passage round the cape. This proves that the importance of direct commercial relations between the Atlantic Coast, and the Hawaiian Islands is being appreciated by the enterprising merchants of the great commercial emporium of the United States.

The arrival of the "Mystic Belle," at this port we have reason to believe, will be the inauguration of a new line of ships put in direct communication with these Islands, and thus give a new impetus to our commercial relations with the United States of no small significance. It is gratifying to note this new evidence of the growing importance of the Hawaiian Kingdom with the outside world.
