Rest.

The Pick of the London Ship-Girl.

Rest? I suppose there is some such thing
Even in this our world, though the preacher's text
On Sunday warned us that Hope's tired wing
For Rest finding never will the rest.
Yet he seemed at ease in his pulpit song,
And the shining City in their padded pews
Must have known real's meaning, they looked so sung;
Nay, their stabled horses, in well-stuffed stalls,
Neighing home to their mangers of fresh-cut fodder
From the crowded church at the sermon's close,
Found even man-master most fain refresh
A flesh brute's labor with slight repose.

But I? For a dozen long hours a day,
Six days in seven, to stand, stand, stand,
Till the sore-strained sinews with pain give way,
And the sick heart sicks—that is man's demand
Of mortal flesh and blood in a woman's shape,
When thy woman is poor and must sell for life,
The venture vending that goes to drape
Pale-faced sisters, or maid or wife,
And so talk of rest to such slaves as I
In the few snatched moments of toil's surease
Is like bidding the torturer's victim try
To sleep 'twixt the rack-turns and dream of peace.

I saw him there in the gilded church,
My Christian master, a shining light,
Philanthropy is the saintly perch
He mounts in public, at conscious right.
I think he champions Slave—or Turks,
I know he feeds upon platform praise;
Does he ever think of the slave who works,
In his hell of slopshop through dreary days?
I am poor, a nobody, no one cares
To sing my sufferings, preach my wrongs;
The latest vendetta of tailor's wares
Provoke no speeches, inspire no songs.

Too poor, too proud! And yet, dear Heaven,
How soothly weary poor flesh can be!
Romance's lovers are thitherward
To seek the bright in such as we.
But Nature speaks in the lowliest heart,
Though it is not always a lyric cry.
There are many victims in Slopdip's mart;
I know seen them sicken and pale, and die;
I have seen them take to the road of shame
As a ready, easy, if short relief
From women were that I may not name,
And petty wrongs that might pass belief.

And I—what better am I than they?
What stronger, hopefuller, after all?
Must it come at last, when, some wretched day
Of bitter loathing shall fire the thrall?
When ruthless shop-rules that war with health,
And moreover things that mock at right,
My little strength and my lower wealth
Have taxed till patience is put to flight;
When the weary flesh, and the spirit crushed,
And the worst, sore, life-sapping ills,
Sin-free a lunge that once had blushed
At thought of the refuge that saves—and kills.

Not yet! But if, or—ah, Heaven?—when—
The pitiless rule and the penal rack
Our poor hearts have condemned, and Mammon's pen
Scribes through the name of one more slain back,
Will the wealth-spoil'd women who, sented, wear
My flagging strength with their wanton whims,
Tax blame of the bondswoman's soul wreck share?
Will the sleek-faced singers of saintly hymns,
The lynx-eyed traders on girlish toil,
Who trade, and barter, and tax, and tret,
Take any stain from the shame and soil
Of an o'er-worked woman who sinned—for rest?
—[Punch.

Miscellaneous.

A lady need not necessarily be nervous or athletic to jump at an offer.

An editor who was told that his last article was as clear as mud, said: "Well, that covers the ground anyhow."

The Union loss during the Rebellion was 327,184; the rebel nearly 300,000. This is the recently verified official account.

The Peruvian dollar is now worth 75c cents, and the Peruvian who can head a charitable subscription with $50 is a rarity.

"Missionary teas" are very popular. The gossip is confined exclusively to people in foreign parts and is harmless.

A prisoner at the grate. Turnkey—"Are you in for contempt?" Prisoner, with indignation—"No sir. I haven't fallen that low—it's a simple drunk."

The denunciation of Bernhardt by the clergy of Montreal has so decreased the demand for tickets to her performances there that speculators are offering them at reduced prices.

It is reported that Lord Beaconsfield has received one hundred and thirty-three offers to translate "Endymion" into French—ninety-four from women and thirty-nine from men.

A Dutchman says that his neighbors are "te vorst neighbors people dot never vas. Mine little pigs und mine hens come home mit dere ears split und toddler day two of dem come home missing.

Uncompromising.—The doctor's daughter—"I declare, your a dreadful fanatic, Mrs. McCizzon. I do believe you think nobody will be saved but you and your minister!" Old lady—"Awoe, my dear, ah wishes I has my doots about the meenister!"

When the cook placed the turkey on the table, upside down on the dish—that is, with its back up—the head of the house got his back up, too, gave her a withering look and almost profanely asked if she "proposed he was going to crawl under the table and cut a hole up through the plate, to get at the breast of the fowl?"

"You did wrong to shoot that man's dog. You might have pushed him off with the butt of your gun." Said the Galveston Recorder to a man who was charged with shooting a neighbor's dog. "I would have done that replied the prisoner, if the dog had come at me tail first, but he came at me with his biting end.

He was a young reporter, and he thought he'd do a smart thing: so he stole the sermon of an eminent divine before church Sunday morning and carried it to the office, so they had it in type and on the street by the time church was out. But as the reporter had stolen the sermon the divine couldn't preach it, and had to use another, and of course that made the paper appear ridiculous, and the reporter would like to hear of a job and a cure for bruises.

"I never saw people take so much delight in their children," writes Miss Bird in her new book on the Japanese, "carrying them about or holding their hands in walking, watching and entering into their games, supplying them constantly with toys, taking them to picnics and festivals, and never being content to be without them. Both fathers and mothers take a pride in their children. It is most amusing, about 6 o'clock every morning, to see twelve or fourteen men sitting on a low wall, each with a child or two in his arms, fondling and playing with it, and showing off its physique and intelligence. At night, after the houses are shut up, looking through the long fringe of rope or rattan which conceal the sliding door, you see the naked father bending his ugly, kindly face over a gentle looking baby; and the mother, who more often than not has dropped the kimono from her shoulders, enfolding two children destitute of clothing in her arms. The children, though for our ideas too gentle and formal, are very progressive in books and behavior. They are little men and women, rather than children, and their childish dress appearance is aided by their dress, which is the same as that of adults."

"Gath" in the New York Graphic: Have you noticed how barren of all scandal and investigation the closing months of Hayes are? What woman is lightly mentioned in the Government circles? What man is suspected or challenged? The course of this Administration has saved the reputations of its enemies. Four years ago Congressmen and Secretaries were trembling, spies and detectives were impudent. Now if you arise and say: "Jones or Wilson stole something," there is a vast attention, whereas, if you said it not long before, the reply would be, "Pshaw! everybody steals something." Imputation and corruption thrive together. Many a belittler of Mr. Hayes ought to go to him and say: "Mr. President, I owe to you my reputation and the good name of my family, because you have kept me out of temptation." Mrs. Hayes, though for the past year or two she has been in the newspaper, will leave the White House free to return at any time as the guest of its next mistress, and on the best terms with the best families of the Capitol. She has paid little attention to the mere gaddflies of the Capital: the social suckers who use access to the White House for newspaper notoriety, and to make advantageous marriages with more than the beauty and intelligence of Dolly Madison, but without her restless selfishness which was at last the ruin of her husband. Mrs. Hayes has maintained a family circle at home, where her husband is generally found passings his evenings, among men who brighten his mind and point his suggestions and sympathies.

A writer in St. James' Gazette says that the death of the Lord Chief Justice of England reminds him of a story that Lord Delling told when he was yet Sir Henry Bulwer. "I remember," Sir Henry said, "when I first met Mr. Disraeli. It was in a company of five ambitious, confident, very young men,—nobodies then, but all of whom (if you can allow me to say so much of myself) have come to distinction since. There was my brot, Edward, Monckton Milnes, Alexander Cockburn, Mr. Disraeli and myself. None of us were personally acquainted with Mr. Disraeli except my brother, whose dinner party it was. Mr. Disraeli came late, and we were speaking of him when he came in; and a strange appearance he made. Mr. Disraeli, then a far more athletic figure than you imagine him, perhaps, appeared in a daring costume of bright color,—a yellow waistcoat, green velvet trousers, and low shoes with silver buckles. The impression he made was not favorable; and I for one, and I am sure——and——also, instantly prepared to find that my brother Edward had vastly over-praised his man. So we sat down to dinner; and every man talked his best, and there was such a bright rattle of conversation as you may suppose. We were all in good case, all confident, and all well satisfied with ourselves, depend on it. There was not one among us who had not plenty of confidence in himself at all times, and more than a hope of future greatness; and yet, if when we separate we had each been taken aside and put upon our honor to say who was the cleverest man in the party, every one of us would have answered, 'The man in the green velvet trousers.'
