Supplement to the Hawaiian Gazette, Oct. 5th, 1881.

DEATH OF PRESIDENT GARFIELD

THE PRESIDENT'S LAST MOMENTS.

The Nation Bowed Down With Grief.

Letters of Condolence from all Quarters.

We arrange the following account of this sad event from the details furnished by our various exchanges. Our last news was up to Sept. 12th and seemed really very favorable; the official bulletins after that date continued favorable, but every now and then a symptom would be up which indicated that all was not quite right. On the 17th anxiety about the President was renewed. On that day he had a severe chill, and the doctors themselves became alarmed. Every effort was made to prevent a recurrence of the chills but without effect and on the 18th the symptoms were very alarming. The feeling throughout the country was one of intense anxiety, and telegram after telegram was watched for with the keenest interest. On the evening of the 19th there seemed very little hope though the doctors maintained a cheerful stand. The last bulletin published on the morning of the 20th runs as follows:

ELBERON, (N. J.), Sept. 20th.—11:30 A. M. The President died at 10:35 P. M. After the bulletin was issued at 2:30 this evening the President continued in much the same condition as during the afternoon, the pulse varying from 132 to 136, with rather increased force and volume. After taking nourishment he fell into a quiet sleep about 35 minutes before his death, and while asleep his pulse rose to 120, and was somewhat more feeble. At 10 minutes past ten he awoke, complaining of severe pain over the region of the heart, and almost immediately became unconscious, and ceased to breathe at 10:30.

D. W. BLISS,
FRANK H. HAMILTON,
D. HAYES AGNEW.

We give below the clearest account of the last moments of the President that we have come across. General Swaim says:

LONG BRANCH, Sept. 20th.—It was my night to watch with the President; I had been with him a good deal of the time from 3 o'clock P. M. A few minutes before 10 P. M. I left Colonel Rockwell, with whom I had been talking for some minutes in the lower hall, and proceeded upstairs to the President's room. On entering I found Mrs. Garfield sitting by his bedside. There were no others present in the room. I said to her, "How is everything?" She replied, "He is sleeping nicely." I then said, "I think you had better go to bed and rest." I asked her what had been prescribed for him to take during the night. She replied that she didn't know, but she had given him milk punch at 8 o'clock. I then said, "If you will wait a moment I will go into the doctors' room and see what is to be given during the night." She then said, "There is beef tea down stairs. Daniel knows where to get it." I then went into the doctors' room and found Dr. Bliss there, and asked him what was to be given during the night. He answered, "I think I had better fix up a list, and will bring it in to you very soon."

I then went back into the President's room and had some little conversation with Mrs. Garfield. She felt of the President's hand and laid her hand on his forehead and said, "He seems to be in good condition," and passed out of the room. I immediately felt his hands, feet and knees. I thought that his knees seemed a little cool, and got a flannel cloth heated at the fire and laid it over his right hand, and then sat down in a chair beside his bed. I was hardly seated when Dr. Boynton came in and felt the President's pulse. I asked him how it seemed to him. He replied, "It is not so strong as it was this afternoon, but is very good." I said, "It seems to be doing well." "Yes," he answered, and passed out. He was not in the room more than two minutes. Shortly after this the President awoke. As he turned his head on awakening I arose and took hold of his hand. I was on the left-hand side of the bed as he lay. I remarked, "You have had a nice, comfortable sleep."

The President said, "Ah, Swaim, this terrible pain!" placing his right hand on his breast, about over the region of the heart. I asked him if I could do anything for him. He said, "Some water." I went to the other side of the room and poured about an ounce and a half of Poland water in a glass and gave it to him to drink. He took the glass in his hand, raising his head as usual, and drank the water very naturally. I then handed the glass to the colored man Daniel, who came in during the time I was getting the water. Afterwards I took and wiped his forehead, as he perspired on awakening. He then said, "Oh, Swaim, this terrible pain!" pressing my hand on it. I laid my hand on his chest. He then threw both hands up to the side and about on a line with his head and exclaimed, "Oh, Swaim, can't you stop this?" and again, "Oh, Swaim!" I then saw him looking at me with a stirring expression.

I asked him if he was suffering much pain. Receiving no answer I repeated the question with like result. I then concluded that he was either dying or was having a spasm, and called to Daniel, who was at the door, to tell Dr. Bliss and Mrs. Garfield to come in immediately. I glanced at the small clock, hanging on the chandelier nearly over the foot of his bed, and saw that it was 10:10 o'clock. Dr. Bliss came in within two or three minutes. I told Daniel to bring the light—a lighted candle which habitually sat behind a screen near the door. When the light shone full upon his face I saw that he was dying. When Dr. Bliss came in, a moment after, I said, "Doctor, have you any stimulants? he seems to be dying." The doctor took hold of his wrist, feeling for his pulse, and said: "Yes, he is dying." I then said to Daniel, "Rouse and arouse the house." At that moment Colonel Rockwell came in, when Dr. Bliss said, "Let us rub his limbs," which we did. In a very few moments Mrs. Garfield came in, and said: "What does this mean?" and a moment afterwards exclaimed: "Oh! why am I made to suffer this cruel wrong?" At 10:35 P. M. the sacrifice was completed, and he breathed his last calmly and peacefully.

The only treatment that was given just before death was hypodermic injections of brandy by Dr. Agnew, assisted by Dr. Boynton. Occasionally they spoke with Dr. Bliss in quiet whispers. The President suffered no pain after the time he placed his hand over his heart. He passed away almost quietly. The time between life and death was marked by no physical exhibition nor any word. There was absolutely no scene. The intervals between gasping became longer, and presently there was no sound. Every one present knew that death had come quickly, without pain. When it became evident that he was dead Mrs. Rockwell placed her arm around Mrs. Garfield and led her quietly from the room. She uttered no word. One by one the spectators left the scene. The doctors only remained in the room, and the windows were closed up.

Mrs. Garfield from the moment she was announced remained with her husband till his death, placing her hand on his chest and bending over him. The first time she broke down in tears was when she went to her own room. She shortly returned and remained with the body till 7 A.M.

A post mortem examination was held the next day and an official bulletin was published at 11 P.M. on September 20th. Drs. Hamilton, Agnew, Bliss, Barnes, Woodward, Reyburn, Andrew H. Smith of Elberon, Acting Assistant Surgeon D. S. Lamb, of the Army Medical Museum, Washington, were present. The operation was performed by Dr. Lamb. It was found that the ball after fracturing the right eleventh rib, had passed through the spinal column in front of the spinal canal, fracturing the bone of the first lumbar vertebra, driving a number of small fragments of bone into the adjacent soft parts, and lodging just below the pancreas, about two inches and a half to the left of the spine and behind the peritoneum, where it had become completely encysted. The immediate cause of death was secondry hemorrhage from one of the mesenteric arteries adjoining the track of the ball, the blood rupturing the peritoneum, and nearly a pint escaping into the abdominal cavity. The hemorrhage is believed to have been the cause of the severe pain in the lower part of the chest complained of just before death. An abscess cavity, six inches by four in dimensions was found in the vicinity of the gall bladder, between the liver and the transverse colon, which were strongly inter-adherent. It did not involve the substance of the liver, and no communication was found between it and the wound, along the suppurating channel, from the external wound, being the loin muscles and right kidney, almost to right groin. This channel is known to be due to the borrowing of the pus from the wound and was supposed during life to have been the track of the ball. On the examination of the organs of the chest, evidence of severe bronchitis were found on both sides with broncho pneumonia of the lower portions of the right lung, and also, though to a much less extent on the left. The lungs contained no abcesses, and the heart no clots. The liver was enlarged and fatty, but free from abcesses; nor were any found in any other organ except the left kidney, which contained, near the surface, a small abscess about one-third of an inch in diameter. In reviewing the history of the case in connection with the autopsy, it is quite sufficient evidence that the different suppurating surfaces, and especially the fractured spongy tissue of the vertebra furnish sufficient explanation of the septic condition which existed.

(Signed.) D. W. Bliss, J. K. Barnes, J. J. Woodward, Robert Reyburn, Frank H. Hamilton, D. Hayes Agnew, Andrew H. Smith, D. S. Lamb.

Dr. Bliss stated that the autopsy had been a very tedious one, and that the time occupied in searching for the ball alone was nearly three-quarters of an hour. The doctors said that Mrs. Garfield was feeling much relieved since the autopsy, inasmuch as it resulted in establishing the fact that the President's death was inevitable. The doctor stated further that the point of the ball was somewhat blunt, or in a battered condition, caused by the force with which it struck the rib, while in other respects its original shape was not altered. Dr. Bliss took charge of the bullet and sealed it up, for preservation until the Courts should require its production. The State of New Jersey has issued a permit for the removal of the body.

The President's appearance after death is thus described.

NEW YORK, September 21.—The Tribune's Long Branch special says: Of the appearance of the President after death, Benedict, the undertaker, said: "His face had a life-like appearance. There was no sign of pain upon it. He looked as if he had quietly fallen asleep. If he suffered from pain his sufferings must have been short."

His form is greatly wasted, but it is not a skeleton by any means. The President will be dressed in the same suit of clothes he wore in delivering his inauguration address, with the exception of a pair of silk stockings knit for him by his mother, lately received. The coffin is six feet three inches long, covered with black cloth, with velvet mounting. The handles and thumscrews are of solid silver. The inside is upholstered with ruffled white satin. The coffin plate is of silver, and the inscription, written by Attorney-General MacVeagh, is as follows: "James Abram Garfield, born November 19, 1831. Died President of the United States, September 19, 1881."

September 21st the remains of the President will be removed from Elberon to Washington.

WASHINGTON, September 21st.—A vast throng of people assembled around the depot to do honor to the illustrious dead, every avenue and approach being densely packed with citizens. As the train slowly rolled into the depot, at 4:41, every head uncovered and a profound silence prevailed. The sense of the grave pervaded the vast throng which for more than an hour had been patiently waiting for the resultant. Soon Mrs. Garfield, assisted by Secretary Blaine, descended from the car and taking his arm upon her right, and that of her son Harry upon the left, walked directly to the carriage in waiting. Her face was completely concealed by a heavy black veil, which hung nearly to the ground. She entered the State carriage, and was followed by her daughter, Mrs. Garfield, her son Harry, Mrs. Rockwell and Miss Rockwell. President Arthur leaned upon the arm of Senator Conkling. General Grant was present. The Cabinet, physicians and attendants. After they had moved in a short distance from the entrance, the coffin appeared, borne upon the shoulders of soldiers of the Second Artillery. As the coffin was borne to the hearse, the marine band stationed across the street played "Nearer, my God, to Thee," while every head was bowed, and many eyes were dimmed by the strains of the sweetly familiar hymn. After the coffin had been placed in the hearse, the remainder of the party entered their carriages and took their places in the procession. As soon as the last of the Presidential party had entered the carriages, a signal was given by a bugle and the military escort formed in line and the head of the procession started on its way to the Capitol in the following order: A platoon of mounted police, General Ayres, and mounted staff, the Washington Light Infantry and band, the Union Veteran Corps, National Rifles, Washington Light Guard, Capital City Guard, U. S. Marine Band and Drum Corps of 50 men, a detachment of U. S. Marines, Second U. S. Artillery Band, four companies of heavy artillery and one light battery. After the hearse came the carriage of President Arthur, with mounted policemen on either side. The funeral procession moved slowly up the avenue, crowds lined the sidewalks all the way from Sixth street to the east front of the Capitol, and along this portion of the route the crowd was apparently as great as upon the occasion of the President's inaugural procession. As the procession moved up the avenue, scarcely a sound was heard, save that from the moving feet of the men and horses. Hats were removed and heads were bowed as by a common impulse of deep and unfeigned grief, as the procession moved on toward the Capitol. A vast assemblage had congregated to view the funeral cortege. At the foot of the steps was a double rye of Senators and Representatives, headed by their respective officers, waiting in respectful silence to escort the remains in to the Rotunda. A hush came over the multitude and all heads were reverently uncovered as the coffin was carefully lifted from the hearse. With a solemn tread the remains of President Garfield were borne into the Rotunda and placed upon the catafalque. The Senators and Representatives preceded, and ranged themselves on each side of the dais. At 3:17 P.M. the lid of the coffin was opened and the face of the late President exposed. Notwithstanding President Arthur and Blaine approached and gazed upon the face of the dead, and then slowly and sadly passed out of the hall. A line was formed by Sergeant-at-Arms Bright, and one by one those present advanced and gazed at the emaciated and discolored face. The public at large was then admitted, and hundreds of persons testified, by their reverential manner and mournful conduct, the sorrow which they felt on looking upon the features of their murdered President. As the shadows of night began to fall, the vast dome of the Capitol was illuminated by the dim light falling in upon the mournful drapings of the Rotunda and upon the still face of the dead President, and served to heighten the solemnity of the scene.

Mrs. Garfield to-day expressed her sincere desire not again to see the White House, where she has passed so many days of sorrow and anxiety, and will not visit it while in the city, but remain at the residence of MacVeagh.

At 11 o'clock there was still a large number of people about the east front of the Capitol, waiting in line to view the remains. From the uncovering of the coffin at half-past 3, there was one continuous stream of men, women and children passing the bier, and at least 5,000 persons viewed the remains.

This constant stream continued as long as the authorities permitted access. Sept. 23d impressive religious services were held over the body, and Dr. Power delivered a most feeling address. The scene in the rotunda of the Capitol, where the President's body lay in state is thus described.

The vast area presented a mass of faces. In the rear of the circles were the Government officials and other prominent personages and a large number of ladies. The costumes of the ladies presented no contrast of colors, but were uniformly black, with here and there a white bonnet to relieve the monotony. On the north and south ran a line of brilliant color where the diplomatic corps and the officers of the army and navy set. Then, again, another line of black and the sombre dress of the members of the House, the Senate and the Supreme Court. In the centre arose the dark mass of the catafalque, but as the light was a bit of color where the ladies of the choir, in their white dresses, were grouped. Above rose the massive walls of the rotunda, gradually converging and centering in the pictures of the apotheosis of Washington. Below was the incompleted fresco of the "First Century of the public," with the scaffold for the workmen suspended in mid air the partially finished work typical of the life which had so suddenly come to an end. From the windows eighty feet above streams of sunlight came floating down, and dashed with its ruddy color a small space at the foot of the coffin, and fell upon the solemn upturned faces of the spectators.

A little after 11 o'clock, Mrs. Garfield came to take a last look at the body of her husband and the account is inexpressibly soothing, coming as it does in contrast with all the display and pomp which surround the clay of one who has been great. A quiet procession passed privately into the rotunda, which was for the time cleared of all guards and watches, and for the last time, the widow took leave of her dead. After the services the coffin was removed solemnly to the depot and the funeral train which was to bear the last earthly remains of the President, started at 5:21 P. M. This journey of the dead must have been most impressive, wherever the train passed were silent crowds; vast multitudes and not a sound; probably nothing could be more striking or show how deep-seated in the heart of the nation was its great sorrow.

The melancholy cortege reached Cleveland Sept. 26th, and on leaving the depot moved very slowly down Euclid avenue, the bells tolling and the people standing with uncovered heads. All the houses on the route of the march were elaborately decorated. Arriving at the Park, the remains were conveyed through a line of guards to the pavilion for the lying-in-state until the interment. The casket was placed by the pall-bearers on a dais underneath the canopy, which was supported by four gilt Egyptian columns. Out of respect to the widow, the face of the late President will not be exposed, but instead there will be placed an admirable copy likeness taken by J. T. Ryder, on Garfield's return from the Chicago Convention. It is a most natural portrait.

Most elaborate decorations have been prepared in Cleveland, and work was continued upon them night and day, so as to have them ready in time. Only two hours sleep in twenty-four hours was taken by those who were engaged in this work until it was completed. We give below the music selected for the funeral. This took place just after the steamer left.

The programme for the music at the funeral on Monday is adopted as follows: The Cleveland Vocal Society will sing Beethoven's "Funeral March" the hymn beginning: "Thou art gone to the grave, but we will not deplore thee;" Mendelssohn's chorus, "To the Lord I yield my spirit," and Garfield's favorite hymn beginning:

Not reapers of life's harvest,
Way worn with rusted blade
But the weight drawn round thee
And day begins to fade.

At the grave the united German singing societies will sing ode of Horace. Integer Vitæ Scelerisque Purus.

Marks of sympathy have poured in from all parts of the world and from every portion of the States, we extract below some of the principal.

ELBERON, Sept. 20th.—The following was received by Attorney General MacVeagh last night: NEW YORK, Sept. 19th.—Hon. Wayne MacVeagh, Attorney, Long Branch: I have your telegram, and the intelligence fills me with profound sorrow. Express to Mrs. Garfield my deepest sympathy.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

NEW YORK, Sept. 20th.—The Evening Post's Long Branch special says: This has been received by Mrs. Garfield: "Words cannot express the deep sympathy I feel with you. May God support and comfort you, as He alone can.

QUEEN, Balmoral."

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22d.—The following dispatch has been received at the Department of State:

The President of the French Republic to Mr. Arthur, Vice President of the United States, Washington:

MONT SOUS VAUDREAU, Sept. 20th.—I learn that the President of the United States has just died, notwithstanding the excellent intelligent care he has received during the long period of his suffering. Be pleased to convey the expression of my sympathy to Mrs. Garfield, his widow, whose courage during the painful ordeal to which he has been subjected has called forth the most sincere admiration. Accept also, in my name and that of the French Republic, the expression of the deep grief we feel in consequence of the fatal result of the odious crime to which Mr. Garfield has fallen a victim. (Signed) GRÉVY.

Secretary Blaine received the following cable message to-day:

LIVERPOOL, Sept. 23d, 1881.

To the Secretary of State, Washington: I beg leave to transmit to you the following resolution passed at a public meeting of the inhabitants of this city held this day. I assure you I have never known a deeper feeling shown by all classes in Liverpool than on this mournful occasion. The meeting was held in the Town Hall, under my presidency, and the chief magistracy, and it was crowded to the utmost capacity by our most distinguished citizens. I cannot find words to express my own sympathy, both with the great American nation and with the deeply afflicted widow and family of the late beloved President. All England is pervaded with these inadequately expressed sentiments of heartfelt condolence:

Resolved, That the inhabitants of this city of Liverpool, in public meeting assembled, desire to record their horror and indignation at the assassination of General Garfield, President of the United States of America, and to express their deep sympathy with the American nation in their severe loss and their sincere condolence with Mrs. Garfield and her family in their bereavement, and that the Mayor be requested to transmit by cable a copy of this resolution to the Secretary of State, Washington. (Signed) WM. R. FORWOOD,
Mayor of Liverpool.

The following message was received at the State Department:

BERNE, Sept. 21st.—To his Excellency Minister for Foreign Affairs at Washington: The loss of the illustrious President Garfield has caused deep sorrow to the Holy Father. His Holiness directs me to present his condolences to your Excellency and to the Government, and his best wishes for the prosperity of the Republic.

(Signed.) L. CARDINAL JACOBINI.

The floral ornaments sent to the Capitol are very beautiful and appropriate. A wreath presented by Queen Victoria through the British Legation has attracted much attention; and this expression of sympathy on the part of the Queen has endeared her to American hearts. The wreath is composed of white and Marshal Niel roses, on a base of smilax, and the inscription is, "Queen Victoria to the memory of the late President Garfield"—an expression of her sorrow and sympathy with Mrs. Gerfield and the American nation.

Four very elaborate and exquisitely beautiful flower pieces, received from the White House, have been placed at the head of the bier. Other floral tributes have also been received and placed about the catafalque.

Queen Victoria presents a beautiful floral offering, which has been placed at the head of the President's bier, inscribed: "Queen Victoria. To the memory of the late President Garfield and the American nation."
