Roll Call.

"Corporal Green!" the Orderly cried,
"Here!" was the answer, loud and clear,
From the lips of a soldier who stood near;
And "Here!" was the cry echoed the next comrade,
"Cyrus Drew!"—then a silence fell—
This time no answer followed the call;
Only the rest took the sad news from pale lips,
Killed or wounded, he could not tell.

There they stood in the falling light,
Under the roll of battle grave, dark looks,
As pliant to be read as open books,
While slowly gathering the shades of night.

The fife on the hillside was sighing with blood
And down in the vale, where the poppies grew,
Were redder stains than the poppies knew;
And crimson dyed was the river's flood.

For the foe had crossed from the other side
This day in the face of a murderous fire,
That swept them down in its leaden ire,
And their life-blood must to color the tide.

"Herbert Kline!" at the call there came
Two stalwart soldiers into the line,
Bearing between them this Herbert Kline,
Wounded and bleeding to answer his name.

"Ezra Kver!"—each voice answered "Here!"
"Hiram Kerr!"—but no man replied.
They were brothers, these two; the one sighed,
And a shudder went through the comrades near.

"Epaminis Deane!"—then a soldier spoke:
"Dead, carrying the regiment's colors," he said
"When our colonel was shot I left him dead,
But after the army wavered and broke."

"Close in the ranks!" his body lies,
I saw it a moment and gave him a drink;
He mentioned his mother's name I think,
And death came with it and caused his eyes."

"Twas a victory, but it cost us dear—
For that company roll, when called at night,
Long a hundred men that went into the fight,
Numbered but twenty that answering to "Here!"

Miscellaneous.

Sir Lionel Sackville West is the ninth British Minister commissioned to Washington during Queen Victoria's reign.

Mr. Carl Bock, a naturalist, now exploring Siam, discovered in Siamirn two years ago the smallest antelope in the world. The adult of this species was hardly fifteen inches in length and nine in height.

Whitelaw Reid, the newly-married editor of the New York Tribune, is thus done up in the society column of a Western paper: "The correspondent of the New York Herald, Mr. Reid, has married Miss Millie, with a dowry of $125,000.

Next invented $40,000 in an alleged silver mine. Receiving unfavorable reports, he went out to see what he had paid for. Accompanied by an expert, he found that he had invested in an open quarry which wouldn't pan out five cents to the ton.

Bloodoun College has had a experience which has given a death blow to hazing in one institution at least. A freshman was put through the operation and was treated so severely as to lose an eye. His father has shown his appreciation of the act by bringing seven suits of $10,000 each. Five sophomores and two juniors are the happy defendants, and it is to be hoped that in the interest of justice and decency he may recover the full amount.

Last year the letters received by mail and distributed in New York City numbered more than 280,000,000, being on an average of 780,000 per day. The aggregate weight of these letters would be more than 2,100 tons. In addition to this are postal cards, which average more than 1,000,000 a week, and also city letters, which average more than 1,500,000 per week.

The present Education Minister in Italy is meditating the total abolition of art academies in that country. The buildings are to be turned into galleries and museums, and their educational functions to be left to private institutions independent of the State. The young artists of Rome lately presented a memorial to the Minister, asserting that academic instruction is incompetent to train artists, and that the sums spent upon it by the State are wasted.

M. Jules Ferry has directed the prefects throughout France to press for the creation of girls' schools in persons, which, to save expense, have hitherto arranged for the free admission of girls of the lower classes into nuns' private schools. He represents these girls as receiving under the present rule an almost mechanical teaching, in order to show the paying scholars that they receive the extra value of their money. The clerical organs warmly resent this reflection on the nuns.

It is complained in Philadelphia that the public schools are unduly crowded, some teachers having as many as sixty-six pupils, and others, numbers varying between forty-five and sixty-six. That the work accomplished under these circumstances should be thorough, even with the most brilliant of teachers, is a preposterous expectation, and the penurious one that permits such folly is inexcusable. It goes without saying, considering this crowding, that the Philadelphia teachers are illy paid.

What is believed to be trustworthy information from all the wine-producing departments of France places the product for the present year considerably higher than was the yield of a year ago. Last year 29,677,472 hectolitres were returned, but it is expected that for this year the vintage will reach 32,000,000, and that it may go as high as 35,000,000. Of all the provinces Hérault yields most, the estimate being for 4,500,000 hectolitres. The Aude comes next with 3,250,000, and Charente Inferieure follows with 1,872,000.

The Moslem priests warned the "infidel" French not to enter, or attempt to enter, the holy city of Kairwan, the sacred streets of which had not been passed by the foot of Christian dog for more than a thousand years, according to their account. The French soldiers were told that the Angel of Death stood at the city gates ready to annihilate them if they attempted to profane the holy place by their presence. But they pressed forward, nevertheless, the gates were opened and the "infidels" marched in and took possession. The African Arabs were astonished upon finding that their supposed holy city was no under Divine protection.

When the Soldene Burlesque Company were coming out on the Overland the other day a little boy on the train began to cry bitterly on account of the loss of his toy balloon, which had disappeared. Just as his mother was sitting up to search the symmetrical Emily, who was dozing in her berth, suddenly yawned, when the balloon floated out of her mouth, into which it appeared to have been drawn by breathing. There is something reasonable about this story in fact, we know it to be true, but there is no use trying to get us to believe that other tough yarn to the effect that on another occasion while "Ezra" was lying on her berth, fast asleep, a near-sighted traveler came by and stuffed his night-shirt and comb and brush into her mouth under the impression that it was his valise. We dont believe anything of the kind.—Detroit Dodd.

I have seen the Grand Old Appian Way, as my guide book calls it. The G. O. A. W. is several miles long and some sixteen or eighteen feet wide. In fact, it is a very common sort of lane, except that it is narrower than most American lanes, and though it is fenced in and well paved, it is far removed from either grandeur or beauty. A drive along the Appian Way left and the average Roman steed, the meanest horse attainable outside of Mexico, driven by the average Roman citizen, is one of the least sublime exercises I know of. The citizen may possibly be descended from Caligula or Augustus, and the horse every time it breathes may pump through its gothic carcass the noble blood of Bucephalus, but they don't look it, and you must "make believe very hard." Like the marchioness over her lemonade, to make the drive other than prosaic. However, it was built by Appius Claudius, the gentleman who had a difficulty with Virginius concerning the latter's daughter 2,000 years ago, and that is a good while.—Bonnie Letter.

It is related of the late Governor Bagley of Michigan, who was a strict Sabbatarian, that being in Detroit one Saturday Sunday, he was walking with a companion, through a little-frequented street on the way from church when he heard sounds that were suspiciously like the clicking of ivory balls. He put his head inside the door, asked to see the proprietor, and when the person presented himself, inquired politely: "Do you make it a practice, sir to keep your hall open on Sunday?" The man glanced quickly around to see that nobody was within easy hearing, then bent over, and put his mouth close to Mr. Bagley's ear as he answered with a significant wink: "Well, no Governor, not as a general thing, you know; but if you and your friends there would like to play a little game, I guess I can fix it for you."

The oldest inmate of the Ohio Penitentiary, both as regards age and period of time spent in imprisonment, is Horace Brooks, who is numbered on the prison register as No. 2178, received November 10th, 1860, under sentence for life for murder in the second degree. At the date of his entrance into the prison he was forty-three years of age, and the thirty-one years spent in prison makes him now seventy-four years old. The old fellow is hale and hearty, and bids fair to reach (by reason of strength) his full four score. For the last seven years he has been somewhat annoyed by a large "rose cancer" growing upon his forehead, to which an ordinary mortal would have long ago succumbed, but which does not seem to greatly injure the old man's health, while it does serve him to good purpose in one respect—furnishes him something to complain of, as a man of his age and strength has a perfect right to have. The history of his crime is briefly this: He owned a farm in the suburbs of Cleveland through which railroad ran, the cars ran over and killed some of his sheep, and to avenge this injury Brooks obstructed the track, threw off a train, and killed five persons. He was indicted for murder by the Grand Jury of Cuyahoga county, tried in the Court of that county and sentenced to the penitentiary for life. At the time of his conviction he was quite a wealthy man, and the property he then owned has become extremely valuable, having since become a part of the city of Cleveland. Brooks has still hopes of getting out, and look forward to better days. His kindred and friends have long forgotten him, and not many years hence the place that now knows Brooks will know him no more forever.
