HOUSE FURNISHING

HARDWARE !

CAMPBELL'S NEW BLOCK.

FROM SAN FRANCISCO,

NEW YORK & ENGLAND,

Received by Castle & Cooke

Terrible Gale at Victoria.

Since the memorable hurricane of March, 1875, when numerous buildings were blown down or unroofed and the steamship Mokenge was almost blown to pieces off Cape Flattery and limped into harbor on Good Friday morning with her upperworks, steering apparatus and her wheelhouses shattered, there has been no gale in this neighborhood which equalled in severity that which on April 14th swept over this city and vicinity. The wind rose about 2 o'clock on that morning, and at about 4 o'clock the steamship Geo. W. Elder, then lying in the jaws of the harbor, began to drag her anchor with 30 fathoms of chain out. Capt. Hayward increased the chain to 45 fathoms, which held the ship securely, but it was deemed advisable, as the wind continued to rise, to run into Esquimalt, which was done. As the Elder passed through Royal Roads the following vessels rode at anchor there in apparent security: The Duke of Argyle, Tilor, Cowsnight and Tiger, (British,) and the Gettysburg and Southern Chief, (American.) Before nine o'clock the two American ships had been blown ashore and were beating their bottoms on the beach outside Esquimalt harbor, the sea making breaches over them, and the Tiger was dragging anchors. The wind howled and raged all day. It was found impossible to reach the distressed vessels. Her M. S. Mosier got up steam with that intention, but had she left the harbor no good could have been effected, so she did not move. During the afternoon some of the crew of the Gettysburg and Southern Chief got off and were seen on the spit; but they could not be reached from Esquimalt. At 6 o'clock last evening the position of the Tiger became more perilous as the wind freshened. About 7 o'clock she took the beach a little outside the Southern Chief, and about 8 o'clock the Cowsnight followed. There is very little hope that either of the vessels will be got off without serious damage. The Cowsnight is laden with lumber for South Africa; the other three vessels are in ballast. The Captain of the Cowsnight was on board his vessel; the captains of the Tiger and Gettysburg were on shore, and the captain of the Southern Chief is at San Francisco. No particulars of the (for this locality) unparalleled marine disaster could be learned last night, but it is feared that the vessels are wrecks.

On shore the scene was one that baffled description. The wind tore and raged throughout the entire day and far into the night, uprooting trees and blowing down fences and signboards, and causing much discomfort and, in some cases, peril. About 9 o'clock the wind fell, but until midnight it sobbed and wailed like an evil spirit. It is a remarkable fact that during the gale the glass was comparatively high, never falling below 29.50.

The steamer Alexander, Captain Urquhart, arrived from Nanaimo last evening about 6:30 o'clock, after taking up the bark Ella S. Thayer, in charge of pilot Thompson. Capt. Urquhart reports a gale blowing at Nanaimo when he left, but with no damage resulting to shipping or otherwise. The passage down was a pretty rough one, the spray dashing over the steamer's turtle and some coal being washed from the deck. As the Alexander passed James Island she found the steamers Enterprise, Mikado and Hero safely anchored there.—Seattle Post.

Among the professional reminiscences of Daniel O'Connell when at the Irish bar was the following unique instance of a client's gratitude: He had obtained an acquittal, and the fellow, in the ecstacy of his joy, exclaimed, "Och, counsellor! I've no way here to show your honor my gratitude, but I wish I saw you knocked down in my own parish, and may be I wouldn't bring a faction to the rescue."
