I wish we may say that the time
Till we see and shake the man
Who, by his good deed, has made
They should see and I could be
Thank—what is truth? Two hundred years
Accepted to mean, in German ears,
Distributed with their hearty parts,
Free as from benevolent wills by rain.

The world, in Jesus was given and true,
Thought was but in words and music,
Ah, but then keep their hold, whatever
The million could subsist alone.

Up and down smiling, and in vain blind,
Our hearts are not one the Special Act because,
This (right?) is what for Who William Shakespeare, Jesus.

Miscellaneous.

Modesty has great advantages. It enhances beauty and serves as a veil to unconsciousness.

To prevent butter from sticking to the balls dip the balls first in hot water and then in cold.

Nothing of stains can be removed if, before washing, the spot is rubbed with a cloth wet with ammonia.

While her mother was taking a fit out of the butter, little Daisy asked: "Is that a butterfly, mamma?"

Nerves may be kept looking now for some time by rubbing them thoroughly with a new-angular every day.

The machine pony known as the pet of the Barnum Barnum-Castle-Sardell. The pony stands only thirteen inches high, and is five years of age.

"And what is this animal called?" asked the teacher of the class in natural history, as he pointed to a picture of a mule. And the class all shouted at once, "A messenger boy!"

"What is true bravery?" asks a New York paper. It is going to the front door yourself when you don't know whether the caller is a dear friend, a book agent, or a man with a bill.

The Republic of Guatemala has engaged a Ceylon planter to introduce into that country 500,000 cinchona trees, for obtaining Peruvian bark, from which is distilled the quin known as quinine.

A Pittsburg girl who had refused a good-looking telegraph operator sent three times within six months, goes to a house that he was too much of a washboy that he roamed from pole to pole, from one client to another, and, if he did none, he'd be sentence that the neighbors would be sure to talk.

A young fowl may be known, before plucking, by the largeness of its feet and leg joints; after plucking, a thin neck and water-tingle may be taken as invariable signs of age and toughness, especially in turkeys and fowls. The age of ducks and geese is marked by their beaks, the lower part of which breaks away quite easily when they are young.

Miss Laurie Lean has in her possession a series of letters upon political events for the last ten years, which M. Gambetta wrote to her from day to day. It seems that he used to write to her every evening when they were separated from each other, and to describe minutely all the hall taken place. Amongst the Papers, this new "Journal to Stella," is expected to see the light of very distant day.

A good looking Sioux young girl, whose lower lately asked her if the universal inquiry why it was she was so magnetic, explained the phenomenon by informing him that her mother and father were both telegraph operators.

During the last illness of the Boston Circus, some one told him that he seemed to cough with more difficulty than on the previous day.

"Do I?" said Barnum. "That's evil enough. I've been practicing all night."

The Rose Prairie of San Antonio, Texas, yields, of a species of aster found in that state which makes a honey equal to any that is produced by bees. The little insects share the honey as they gather it in crannies about the size of a small pin that is attached to their bodies. When this pinch is full they insert into the cells of their silver-mouth habitations and there unload. The Prairie says that these are little acts as full of honey as bee hives, and suggests that they could be turned to the same practical food producing use of similar ears were taken in breeding and cultivating the insects.

The best food for hens to make them lay in the winter is wheat cooked with corn-meal and mixed into mush, with scalded skimmed milk, sweet or sour, and given hot. On such food, with warmed water to drink and a light, sunny, warm and clean house, a small flock of 20 light Brahma hens had winter laid from 12 to 15 eggs a day. It is hardly possible for food to do more than that. They had a vine over the house and yard, when the ground was bare of snow, and picked a good deal of grass. The quantity of food given was three quarts daily. Good wheat is better than screenings and cheaper in the end.

A young lady who thought her personal charms gave her the right to be disagreeable was present a few nights since at party, during which quarrels between husband and wife were discussed. "I think," said the unmarried elder son who was present, "that the proper thing is for the husband to have it out at once, and thus avoid quarrels for future. I would light a cigar in the carriage after the wedding breakfast and settle the smoking question forever." "I would knock the cigar out of your mouth," interrupted the belle. "Do you know, I don't think you would be there!" quietly remarked the elder son.

Lighting gas with the finger is a feat anybody may perform. Let a person, in his slippers, walk briskly over a woolen carpet, scintillating his foot thereon, or stand upon a chair, with its legs upon four cushions to insulate it, and he then raised up and down on the body a few times with a staff, by a second individual, and he will light the gas by simply placing his finger to the table. It is only necessary to take the precaution not to touch anything or to be touched by anybody during the trial of the experiment. The amount of electricity acquired by the persons we have described is discharged by contact with another object. One person must turn on the gas while the other fires it.

The cause of "thieves' vinegar" as a prophylactic in contagious fevers is said to have arisen from the confession of four thieves, who during the plague at Marseilles, plundered the dead bodies with perfect security, and, upon being arrested, in condition of their lives being spared, stated that the use of aromatic vinegar had preserved them from the influence of contagion. It is in this account sometimes called "the vinegar four quarts volumes." It was, however, used long before the plague at Marseilles, for it was the common custom of Cardinal Wolsey to carry in his hand an orange deprived of its contents and filled with a sponge which had been soaked in vinegar impregnated with various spices, in order to preserve himself from infection when passing through the crowds which the splendor of office attracted. The first plague raged in 1640, whereas Wolsey died in 1521.

Gallantry awakens early in the breasts of some Boston boys. A lady in that city has a class in the Sunday School of one of the leading churches, the membership of which consists of boys who are each about eight years of age. Like most youngsters, they are of an excitement prone to keep altogether as quiet as the demands of the school require, and are prone to become restless and noisy at times. Last Sunday one of them was particularly unruly, when the teacher, thinking to shame him into quiet, said: "Now, George, I don't know what I shall do with you if you are noisy. I am afraid I shall have to punish you, and think the best way to do so would be to make you sit in my lap." "Ah," said the young scapegrace, with an owl look, "if you should do that, Mm——, I think you would find the whole class getting noisy."

Viewed through the microscope the mosquito presents a picture of mechanical ingenuity as marvelous in execution as it is devilish in design. In the bill alone, which seems so fragile to the unaided sight, there is a combination of five distinct surgical implements. These are a lancet, two cut saws, and a sucker pump. The fifth instrument I have forgotten, but later under the microscope that it is a portable Corliss engine to run the rest of the factory with. I have did the lure of the mosquitoes in the enhanced localities along the Lower Mississippi reminded me constantly of the lure of a manufacturing village, and several times I walked back several miles feeling for a town before I could convince myself that the humming I heard was made by the mosquitoes, with their engines running to shorten their saws. When the cards outside on a cross, the lancet is first pushed into the flesh, when the saw saws, pound back to back, begin to work up and down to enlarge the hole. Then the pump is started and the stolene blood is squirted up into the conservatory, carried forward, and finally, to complete the cruelty of the performance, the wounded drops a quantity of poison into the wound to keep it irritated.
