DISEASES OF MEN.

The importance of the healthiness of the nervous system cannot be over estimated; its power over life and death and the direct bearing which it has on human happiness seems to be recognized; its capabilities, its qualities and its powers; the importance of its healthful preservation, its moderate uses, the danger of overtaxing it, whether through thought, study or intense application in mental investigation and research; whether by the absorbing attention necessary to the conduct of complicated and momentous business interests, or by the excessive indulgence of the appetites and propensities of the system. All these are proper subjects for consideration, as also the knowledge of what is moderation, what is excess, and when these exist the absolute necessity of promptly seeking advice from an expert who for a long series of years has devoted his whole time and attention to the study, investigation and treatment of all the maladies of this important department, to accurately determine the diseased conditions, their nature, causes and origin, whether arising from the want of exercise, its irregularity or excess, and who, from his experience and practice, has learned to discover at once the derangement and as promptly apply the remedy, thus avoiding the painfully slow feeling after the truth, so common to the inexperienced and so annoying to the patient, who, very naturally, wants to know without delay what is the matter, the extent of the derangement, the probabilities of recuperation and the time required.

A striking example of the value of experience and practical observation, as well as the usefulness of the prompt application of suitable remedies, is found in the important statement, coming, not from one, but a dozen public institutions, not only at home but abroad, that a very large proportion of those who suffer from mental disturbance and absolute insanity permanently recover who are placed under treatment within a year after the first symptoms have manifested themselves.

If the intellectual department of the brain has become exhausted by intense mental application, depriving it of the power of connected thought, it can only recover its strength by being properly fed and nourished by the use of certain systematic methods. It is precisely so in every other department, whether of appetite, propensity or passion, each requiring a different remedy for its recuperation and different means for bringing them up from the r overworked and exhausted conditions. The importance of this branch of medical practice can scarcely be overrated, for it reaches even to the perpetuation of family names, the securing of hereditary titles and the retention of estates in the same family.

From a long and large experience in this direction I have been able to command by my success the thankful appreciation of some of the first families in the city and nation; and I certainly can communicate much to cultivated minds in connection with my practical experience in what pertains to the over-exercise of every department of the nervous system and the means of recovering their powers, whether of brain, appetite, propensity or passion.

Diseases of Men.

The immense power which the nervous system and the brain possesses over the health is a most important physiological fact, one that has been hitherto overlooked and upon which a proper system of treatment must depend.

Of all diseases which afflict the human frame there is not one possessing more importance than nervous and general debility, owing to its subtle character and the slow and stealthy manner in which it makes inroads upon the strongest constitution. There can be little doubt that year by year it has been increasing, nor is this to be wondered at. The habits of the present generation are such as tend to debilitate the frame. The customs of society compel us to lead to a great extent a life that is artificial, and the vices of to-day are of the most enfeebling and dangerous kind. There is no complaint that requires closer attention than that of debility, for one of the most fearful results of this disease is that it is not the body only that suffers, but the mind takes of the deterioration, and multitudes who might have lived to become ornaments to society become victims of misery in consequence of their minds becoming weak and believing that their cases were incurable.

Having devoted many years of my practice to this specialty I am now enabled, by a new system of treatment I have discovered, to restore health, vigor and manhood to the most feeble and shattered constitution, no matter how aggravated the case may be or how long standing.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette. Made simply with boiling water or milk.
