What We Call the Baby.

What do we call the baby?
Well, sometimes when he plays
The laughing, babbling thing
Colors vividly in to me
With a gust of shouting and kisses
From red lips midway and high,
And a human heart leaps
Why, then we call him—March!

But when in the midst of a frolic,
At the mood of some passing whim,
The fair north sunshine and showers,
The blue moon, eyes dim
And a sudden rain of passion
Sweeps over the merry face,
We call the baby—April
For he is peculiar, whatever goes.

Then we do wake and rouse,
Freshed from his slumber deep,
The swift, bounding, balmy and precious
With the sweet crimped zone of sleep,
When the glow and the bloom of morning
Not in his glance is play
Like the dawn of an infinite promise,
We call the baby—May!

But when, as the evening closes,
He nestles to whom embraces,
The tongue of my sweetheart
On the bosom, drowsy fair,
Because he is weary and tired,
We call the baby—June!

And if we should ask the household
Under what name they sing
The tender pages of their dailies,
Hailing him chief and king,
They'd laugh at the foolish question
And answer with fervent tone,
That whatever we called the baby,
They loved him just the same.

—Wide Awake.
