The Sea Queen.

She does not dwell in far-off verdant lands,
No mother's beside now her's fond heart she;
No love, and no husband on the sea;
No golden circlet on her dainty hands,
No waiting heart she holds for one afar;
Yet none a love, as none an ocean wide,
Only a little child, with fair blue eyes
That caught their color from the restless wave,
A baby face, both wholesome, bright, and grave,
A guileless chorus clothed in human guise.
The pretty daughter of the second mate—
Though but a toddling child with virtues few,
A wee small girl, she darling of the crew—
A sov'reign in, in embryo of state.

Her little heart, unmindful of their wrongs,
She laughs and jests and shoots their drinking-songs;
And, mixed with hymns her angel mother sang,
She prattles all their coarse and sailor's slang.
At night they hear her pray to Deploy tones,
"Protect us, Dod, from storms and Dary Jones,
And guide the pilot watch till break of day
And keep the rats aboard the ship always."
Untutored infant, motherless, alone,
A baby vagabond that knows no home,
Beloved by all those storm-tossed, hardened men,
She rules their hearts—a throned and sceptered queen,
There's not a man among that loyal crew
But pays the homage to his sov'reign due,
But checks his oath the when those pure footsteps pass,
And says beneath his breath, "God bless the lass."
The second mate has taught his child to be
The sailor's pet, the sov'reign of the sea.

—E. Pauline Johnson.
