SELL'S SPECIFIC PILLS—WARRANTED IN ALL CASES.—Can be relied upon. Never fail to cure! Do not antagonize! Are speedy in action! No change of diet required! Do not interfere with business pursuits! Can be used with perfect detection! Upward of 500 cures the past month—some of them very severe cases. Over one hundred physicians have used them in their practice, and speak well of their efficacy, and approve of their composition, which is entirely vegetable and therefore can do no injury to the system. Numerous testimonials can be shown. Sell's Specific Pills are the original and only genuine Specific Pill. They are adapted for male and female, older young, are the only reliable remedy for affecting a permanent and speedy cure in all cases of Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, with all its trains of evils, such as Urethral and Vaginal Discharges, Gleet, Whites, Rightly or Involuntary Emissions, Impotence, Debility and Irritability, Impotency, Weakness or loss of Power, Nervous Debility, &c., &c., all of which arise principally from Sexual Excesses or Self Abuse, or some constitutional derangement, and incapacitate the sufferer from fulfilling the duties of married life. In all venereal diseases, as Gonorrhœa, Gleet and Strictures, Consulting Physician for the treatment of Seminal, Urinary, Sexual, and Nervous Diseases, who will send, free to all, the following valuable work, in sealed envelopes:

THE FIFTEEN THOUSAND.—Dr. Bell's Treatise on Self Abuse, Premature Decay, Impotence and Loss of Power, Sexual Diseases, Seminal Weakness, Rightly Emissions, Genital Debility, &c., &c., a pamphlet of 96 pages, containing important advice to the afflicted, and which should be read by every sufferer, as the means of cure in the severest stages is plainly set forth. Two stamps required to cover postage. Address, Wm. Bell, Author, 416 Hudson st., New York.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES.—Dr. HAYNE'S Female Pills have never yet failed to remove difficulties arising from obstruction, to stop pain of nature, or to restoring the system to perfect health when suffering from Spinal Affections, Prolapsus, Chest, the Whites, or other weaknesses of the Uterine Organs. The Pills are perfectly harmless on the constitution, and may be taken by the most delicate female without causing disturbance at the time they act like a charm by strengthening, invigorating and restoring the system to a healthy condition, and by bringing on the monthly period with regularity, no matter from what cause the obstruction may arise. They should, however, not be taken during the first three months of pregnancy, though safe at any other time, as miscarriage would be the result.

One box contains 60 pills. Price 1 00.

DAILY LEADER.

THE LATE PRESIDENT.

Mr. Auguste Langel's Reminiscences of Abraham Lincoln.

In the last number of the Revue des Deux Mondes appears an interesting article on President Lincoln. The writer is M. Auguste Langel, whose pen has often, and never without profit to his readers, contributed to the arme periodical. M. Langel paid a visit to Washington some months ago, and had several opportunities of seeing the late President in private as well as in public. He gives much information on the condition of the United States when the war broke out, and on the career of Mr. Lincoln before and after his elevation to the Presidency; but the most attractive passages are those which are of a personal character. The following scene, for instance, is graphically sketched:

"Come and see St. Louis under the oaks of Vincennes,' said my friend Charles Sumner one day to me. He told me that the President opened once a week, no matter how pressing his occupation, his cabinet to all who desired to address a petition or claim to him. We set out for the White House, and entered Mr. Lincoln's cabinet, where, without being announced, we took our places with a dozen people who were waiting for their turn. The walls were covered with large maps representing the divers places where the war was going on. Over the chimney hung a portrait of President Jackson, the features dry and harsh, and bearing the impress of extreme energy. Over the marble there was a photographic likeness, beautifully done—it was that of John Bright, the eloquent defender of the American Union in the British Parliament. Through two spacious windows I could see the white lines of the Potomac, the winding uplands of Maryland, and the half hidden obelisk of Washington standing in sharp relief to the blue sky. Between the two windows stood a huge writing-table, before which the President was seated. He did not perceive Mr. Sumner, being at the moment engaged in talking with some petitioner, whom he dismissed soon after we entered. The usher—who, by the way, was dressed like everybody else—brought forward a woman. She appeared to be in deep affliction, and it was with difficulty that she could explain that her husband was a soldier in the regular army, that he had served for a long term, and now asked for leave to quit his regiment and return to support his family. She got more and more embarrassed as she spoke. "Let me help you," said Mr. Lincoln, kindly, and thereupon he put questions to her with the method and clearness of a lawyer. On the luminous rectangle of the window, through which poured a flood of sunshine, his profile appeared dark; with the right hand he often pushed up his hair, which made it stand straight, or changed it into disordered tufts. While he spoke, all the muscles of the face put in movement gave an angular and strange contour to his head, which had some resemblance to that of Mephistopheles; but his voice had all the softness of the father. After putting some questions to the poor woman, he said "I can't, myself, grant you what you ask. I have the right of disbanding all the armies of the Union" he added, with a strange laugh, "but I cannot give a single soldier his discharge. Only the colonel of your husband's regiment can do what you want." The woman deplored her poverty.

She had never, she said, suffered so much. 'Madam,' said Mr. Lincoln, deepening to a tone of slow and impressive solemnity, I share your sorrow; but remember that we, all of us, as we are, have never suffered what we now suffer. We have all of us our burdens to bear!' He then leant towards her and for a moment only spoke the murmur of the two voices. I saw him write a few words on a piece of paper and gave it to the woman; he then dismissed her with the forms of the most scrupulous politeness. The next who advanced was a young man, who held out his hand to the President, and said with a loud voice. 'As for me, I have come to shake hands with Abraham Lincoln.' 'Much obliged, sir' said the President, offering his big hand 'this is our day for business.'"

Mr. Lincoln, says M. Langel, possessed a most tender and compassionate heart, and one would say he were in his soul mourning for all who perished during the terrible years of his Presidency:

"A sadness which was almost superhuman passed now and then over his brow, on which the wrinkles had deepened into furrows—on those strange features where the hearty laugh of other days had become a sort of painful grimace. I remember meeting the President one evening toward nightfall. He was just leaving the White House, and, according to his habit, was going to the War Office to get news. There was nobody with him, though he had often been recommended not to go out alone; but he despised danger, and he had a horror of constraint. With his plaid folded around him against the cold, he moved slowly on, lost in reverie, like a tall phantom. I was struck with the pensive and suffering expression of his face. Agitation and anxiety had gradually bent, and at last broken, that stout and rustic nature, and worn the nerves of steel of the giant. For four long years he never knew what an hour of repose was. Even his receptions were horrible sufferings. When the saloons of the White House were open the tide of visitors rolled on without stopping before him, and his big, honest hand grasped all those that were held out to him. The slave of the American people, he was condemned to stay at Washington when everybody else had fled from its heat and dust. He only escaped in search of a little verdure to the smiling slopes where the President's country house is situated, by the side of the Soldiers' Home—the asylum where the State keeps a few invalids since the Mexican war. In his walks he saw the beautiful woods cut down to make room for the parapets and glacis of the forts; and at a short distance was the large burial ground, where ten thousand graves, all arranged in lines, were still fresh. I have seen amidst these woods this city of the dead, with its long parallels of alleys, its ten thousand white stones, all alike, and each one marked with the name of a soldier. One seems to pass in review these interminable ranks, the sameness of which has something terrible. These soldiers, who now sleep in an order which nothing will trouble more, Mr. Lincoln had beheld young, vigorous, and full of health!"

While at Washington M. Langel had the honor of an invitation to accompany Mr. Lincoln to see "Lear" performed, to Ford's play-house, and in the same box where he was so soon after foully murdered:

"The Washington theatre is small, and in a state of decay. You reached the President's box by an open passage behind the galleries, and you had only to open a door and draw a curtain to enter. The front of the box was covered with a piece of red velvet. I was, as may be supposed, more occupied with the President than with the performance. He, however, listened with attention, though he knew the play by heart. He followed all the incidents of it with the greatest interest, and talked with Mr. Sumner and myself only the acts. His second son, a boy of eleven, was near him, and Mr. Lincoln held him nearly the whole time, leaning on him, and often pressed the laughing or astonished face of the child on his broad chest. To his many questions he replied with the greatest patience. Certain allusions of "King Lear" to the sorrows of paternity caused a cloud to pass over the President's brow, for he had lost a young child at the White House, and never was consoled. I may be pardoned for dwelling on recollections so personal, which, under other circumstances, I should communicate only to a few friends; for it was on that very spot where I saw him with his child and his friends that death struck down one so full of meekness, as gentle as a woman, as simple as a child. It was there he received the Parthian arrow of vanquished slavery, and fell the noblest victim of the noblest of causes."

Mr. Langel concludes his sketch with these words:

"As always happens, the people, astounded by their sorrow, only now feel all they have lost. Condemned by the force of events to become a great man, Mr. Lincoln has gained a glory which he never coveted. With what larger joy he would have refused it, if at such a price, he could have spared his country the cruel trial from amid which his name was slowly to rise. His glory will survive many a gaudy and hallow renown. It will give a new feature to that pure ideal which places greatness in simplicity; which makes power bend to the law, and which does not separate heroism from self denial. I should say enough if I said that Mr. Lincoln was a Christian statesman, taking the word in the most sublime sense. He never thought of himself, and so his own country and the whole world will keep him in their memory forever."

CLOTHING.

JEFF DAVIS HAS BEEN CAUGHT.

The war is now about played out,
Great things have been wrought,
Our all conquering boys are coming home;
Jeff Davis has been caught,
Hurrah! hurrah! now hang your banners out,
Hurrah! hurrah! let all the people shout.

The wily rebel chief was caught
In ingenuable hide;
He tried to run in petticoats,
But he did not succeed
Hurrah! hurrah! hang all your banners out,
Jeff Davis has been caught, let every one now shout.

Our boys did think it very strange,
A woman should retreat
With a great bowie-knife in hand,
Yet they saw his feet
Hurrah! hurrah! our boys have got good sense;
'Twixt gaiter shoes and soggy boots they know the difference.

Oh, crinoline, we think you fine,
For you could not conceal
The flying rebel President,
Who hid show his heel.
Hurrah! hurrah! there's nothing half so fine
To show a foot and ankle off, like well raised crinoline.

Your days are numbered now, old Jeff,
You surely cannot hope,
Or have a bitter end in view,
Than the end of a stout rope.
Hurrah! hurrah! Jeff Davis has no shoe;
In settling up all his accounts, just keep his crime in view.

The boys who caught Jeff Davis,
We'll welcome one and all,
And treat them to a fine new suit
At ISAACS'S UNION HALL!
Hurrah! hurrah! fling the starry banner out.
Our gallant boys are coming home, let all the people shout.
